NARAYANGANJ 7-MURDER

Call for justice gets louder

Key accused Nur Hossain sent to jail without prayer for remand, victim families resent bringing him from border in Rab custody

WASIM BIN HABIB and SHAHEEN MOLLAH

Their deep anger, kept dormant for 18 months, burst out the moment the microbus carrying Nur Hossain stopped before a Narayanganj court yesterday afternoon.

"We want Nur Hossain to hang," "We want his remand" -- were two of the slogans that reverberated through the Chief Judicial Magistrate's Court as the prime accused in the sensational seven-murder case in Narayanganj was produced there around 2:30pm amid tight security.

Some people brandished their sandals at Nur Hossain, who was smirking.

On Thursday night, he was brought back from India.

The former local Awami League leader fled to India shortly after the abduction and murder of seven people -- Narayanganj ward councillor Nazrul Islam, his driver and three associates, and senior lawyer Chandan Sarkar and his driver, on April 27 last year. Their bodies were later found in the Shitalakkhya river.

The seven were abducted allegedly by some Rapid Action Battalion men from Dhaka-Narayanganj Link Road.

Yesterday, however, the slogans outside the court waned and people were shocked to hear that police did not move to take Nur Hossain on

Just one question

Noorjahan asks why her son, driver of lawyer Chandan, was killed

WASIM BIN HABIB and SHAHEEN MOLLAH

For about 18 months, Noorjahan had been waiting to face Nur Hossain.

"I just want to ask him [Nur] why he killed my son ... Why?" said the woman, in her sixties, whose son Ibrahim was among the seven people killed allegedly by some Rab men on April 27 last year in exchange for money from Nur Hossain.

Ibrahim was the driver of lawyer Chandan Sarker who too was killed that day.

Having lost her eldest child, also the breadwinner of the family, Noorjahan almost lost her sanity. All she could think of was why her son had to be killed.

But Nur, the main accused in the seven-murder case, was in India since the incident.

REUTERS, Yangon

Myanmar democracy champion Aung San Suu Kyi's opposition party yesterday clinched enough seats in parliament to elect a president and form a government when incoming lawmakers convene next year.

Results from the country's election commission confirmed the thumping victory that Suu Kyi's National League for Democracy (NLD) had claimed after the first nationwide election in 25 years on Sunday.

The confirmation came five years to the day since the junta released Suu Kyi from house arrest. She had been confined for the best part of two decades.

The triumph of the charismatic Nobel peace prize laureate sweeps out the old guard of former generals that has run Myanmar, also known as Burma, since President Thein Sein ushered in a raft of democratic and economic reforms four years ago.

Despite the landslide, Suu Kyi cannot become president herself under a constitution drafted by the military before the end of nearly 50 years of rule. She has said she
