On November 19, every major area of the country was invaded by a group of youngsters. They carried with them roses and a smile. Every vehicle or individual passing by the major streets and roads in the country bumped into some of these young people. The mission was to raise awareness and funds for quality education for all. The volunteers were hundreds in groups; all clad in yellow shirts. By now, people in Dhaka, Chittagong, Sylhet and other major areas are familiar with this incursion. For the seventh and the last time, Jaago Foundation and Volunteer for Bangladesh painted the town yellow with their army of volunteers, celebrating their flagship campaign – the UCD (Universal Children's Day).
