

TEAMWORK

Ever played LoL, Dota 2, CS:GO or any game that involves all the parts of the team functioning at their peak? No? Ever been in a group project? There we go.

Even though our species survived through teamwork, it seems impossible for some people to look at the bigger picture and throw in at least the bare minimum for their team. Everyone wants to be Rambo but no one wants to be Watson. What can be done in situations like these?

Nothing. That's what sucks.
 Pls report mid.

APP REVIEW

JELLY JUMP

MASHIAT LAMISA

Platforms: iOS, Android.

Published by Ketchapp, Jelly Jump is one of those games that you can easily get addicted to. Although the main aim of the game is to get a jelly cube to jump on a platform above, it is rather difficult to do so. But that is what makes the game extremely fun and exciting. It is a lot like the annoying Flappy Bird but definitely, more sophisticated with a better platform.

Here's what you have to do in the game. You must tap on your screen at the exact moment to make your jelly get on the platform above before it closes in on both sides. The platform above you forms at different speeds and so, your hand and eye coordination must be precise for the timing to be absolutely correct. Otherwise, you will see ugly, black liquid coming from down below and gulping in your favorite jelly at once. The jelly shapes are soft, with a gorgeous 3D effect that makes it leave splats of fluid on every platform they touch. The looping background track does a fine job in making the game more futuristic; it's as if you're compelled to do anything to stop your jelly from drowning in an abyss and the only way out is to click that "Retry" button over and over again until your hands ache and your mother scolds you for not having a life.

Best part about this game is how it changes the colors of the environment every time. It's simple with stunning visuals and definitely worth your time.
