TIM ROTH: Tarantino will fire any actor with phone on set

'Hateful Eight' actor Tim Roth has joked that Quentin Tarantino has a rule that people should not use their phone's on the set. Tarantino has apparently issued an edict to his cast that they'll be immediately fired if he finds them with a mobile device while shooting. "He developed certain habits like, there are no phones on set at all, that's a done, no electronic devices so you have Checkpoint Charlie, and whether it's on land or the side of a mountain or wherever, you hand your phones in," Hateful Eight Roth shared on "The Jonathan Ross Show."

"Nobody is allowed to have a device at all. You'd be fired, immediately fired. I said to him, 'What happens if one of your actors brings a phone on and is doing a bit of that Angry Birds?' and he said, 'Oh if it's an actor, I just leave the set and the Weinsteins show up and it'll be recast!'"

MUSE to headline Glastonbury

British rockers Muse will headline the Glastonbury music festival on June 24. The band, consisting of Matt Bellamy, Chris Wolstenholme and Dominic Howard, will play the festival in Somerset.

Muse will become the first band to headline all three nights of the prestigious music festival, as they previously topped the bill on Sunday in 2004 and Saturday in 2010. They join Coldplay who will perform on the main stage on closing night, Sunday June 26, making them the first act to top the bill at the festival four times. Emily Eavis, who organises the event with her father Michael Eavis, revealed that all three headliners are British. "We've got three brilliant British bands headlining the festival." While she did not confirm Saturday's act, Emily revealed she is excited that Chris Martin and Coldplay are returning to Worthy Farm and admits it feels like a homecoming to have them play again.
