

WARNER BROS postpones Morgan Freeman-starrer 'Going in Style'

Warner Bros has postponed Morgan Freeman-starrer 'Going in Style' from May 6, 2016 to April 7, 2017. The Zach Braff-directed comedy, which also stars Michael Caine, Alan Arkin, Matt Dillon and Ann-Margret, is a tale of three retired men who plot a bank robbery after losing their pensions and is based on the 1979 film of the same name that starred George Carlin, Art Carney and Lee Strasberg.

In its old release date, it would have faced off against Disney/Marvel's 'Captain America: Civil War', but its new April 2017 date is currently open.

Warner Bros also announced that it is moving Ben Affleck's 'The Accountant' back by one week, from October 7 to October 14, 2016 as well as moving next year's Will Ferrell-Amy Poehler comedy 'The House' from June 2, 2017, to June 30, 2017.

New plots planned for QUANTICO

After Priyanka Chopra's international TV series "Quantico" got a go-ahead for a second season, its creator and show-runner Josh Safran says the show's storyline will hit the reset button every season with the Indian actress's role as the "focal point".

ABC handed out 15 renewals on Thursday, including "Quantico," and Safran spilled some beans about what's coming up in the series, "The producers ABC Studios and Mark Gordon Co. have decided that

'Quantico' storyline will hit the reset button every season. Alex Parrish will remain the focal point and a few characters from season one will probably return but the storyline and much of the cast will start anew." He added: "This story was about terrorism and America. Season two will attack a different issue that plagues America's security."

Quantico emerged out of the box as a solid contender for ABC, one of the few new shows of the season to stand out.
