LEAD launches entrepreneurship training

STAR BUSINESS REPORT

Leadership Excellence and Development or LEAD yesterday launched a special training for new entrepreneurs in partnership with globally renowned organisations.

LEAD focuses on training, mentoring and capacity building in leadership and entrepreneurship, said Ashfaq Zaman, president of the organisation.

"Our aim is to ignite the true potential of leaders to their full extent by inspiring, mentoring and equipping them with the right skills to compete globally."

By unlocking the potential, LEAD can positively contribute to the country's economy by grooming second-generation Hotel in Dhaka. LEAD that organises allyear training is also endorsed and certified by the world's largest education organisation -- Pearson of the UK -- which owns both the Financial Times and Edexcel.

LEAD is going to organise its first session training programme with Al-Arafah Islami Bank, for a 50-student batch, which begins on May 13, organisers said.

The next batch will come from Anwar

Group, which has already signed a deal, according to Zaman. LEAD also offers some free courses for young people.

The Dhaka Chamber of Commerce and Industry has also signed a deal with LEAD, to run a competition across the country, the winners of which will be able to get training for free.

Thousands of graduates in Bangladesh are unable to join any productive work from lack of proper training, said Mohammad Mahbubur Rahman, former information secretary.

LEAD can play an important role and reorganise the youth's thinking pattern toward entrepreneurship, he said.

Rubina Husain, vice president of entrepreneurs, visionary leaders and pio- Bangladesh Federation of Women neers, he said at a programme at Lakeshore Entrepreneurs; Niaz Rahim, director of Rahimafrooz Group, and Saidur Rahman, country manager of Pearson Bangladesh, also spoke at the event.

LEAD has also designed a video tutorial, which will be launched by July, showing entrepreneurs the way to plan a business model and the process for applying for a trade licence. LEAD has been accepted at the 11th World Economic Forum 2015 as the only Bangladeshi startup organisation.

Ford Motor to recall 42,300 cars in India

Ford Motor Co will recall 42,300 cars in India likely affected by a software error "which could result in the airbags not deploying in certain collisions in which they are intended to deploy", the carmaker's local arm said on Friday.

Ford India will recall the Figo hatchback and Figo Aspire compact sedan built at its new plant in Sanand in the western state of Gujarat, it said in a statement.

The company did not clarify if the software error affects only domestic sales or exports from the plant as well.

"A corrective action on all Figo and Figo Aspire vehicles, presently at Ford dealerships, has been undertaken, leading to a resumption of deliveries to customers," Ford India said, adding that the recalled cars would also get a software upgrade.

Tarana for tax cuts on handset imports

She also urged mobile phone importers and service operators to offer monthly instalment payment options on handsets for customers.

"We have no alternative to offering instalment facilities on handsets, if we want to increase internet penetration," she said.

To allow for handset models locked to particular operators, some changes must be made to the existing regulations, said Shahjahan Mahmood, chairman of Bangladesh Telecommunication Regulatory Commission.

Currently, mobile operators cannot import handsets, but if they were allowed to make joint arrangements, handset prices would drop by 15 percent to 20 percent, said Mahmud Hossain, chief corporate affairs officer at Grameenphone.

"Allow locking of handsets to an operator for 2-3 years so smartphones can be offered with special bundles for the subscribers," Hossain said.

Mahmood asked handset importers to submit a proposal on reviewing VAT and tax immediately, so they can take appropriate measures to promote the industry.

Currently, there is a 25 percent tax on handset imports and around 60 percent tax on different accessories, which present no business case for the entrepreneurs to establish assembly plants, said Ruhul Alam Al Mahbub Manik, president of Bangladesh Mobile Phone Importers Association.

Abu Saeed Khan, senior policy fellow at Colombo-based LIRNEasia, said a high tax on handsets and accessories is an incentive for smuggling to flourish.

Referring to research by different global organisations, Khan said Bangladesh will acquire five million new internet connections every year for the next five years. "Is the regulator or the government ready to regulate the market?"

The National Board of Revenue Hoque added. needs specific proposals from investors to review tax and VAT structures on imported handsets, said Moinul Khan, director general of Customs Intelligence and Investigation Department.

He said the IMEI (international mobile equipment identity) number, or the 15- or 17-digit code that uniquely identifies mobile handsets, would solve all the problems regarding security and counterfeit handsets. The commission has initiated a six-month pilot project to monitor legal handset imports and later, it would move to register handsets, said Col Nasim Parvez, BTRC's director general on spectrum management.

Bangladesh would be a huge market if at least one smartphone could be ensured for each of the country's nearly 8 crore unique mobile users, said BMPIA General Secretary Rezwanul Hoque said.

"A master roadmap is needed to address where we want to go in the next few years."

There are currently only 1.5 crore smartphones in the market and it has enormous prospects if the tax regulation is okay with the importers,

Some 1.6 crore mobile handsets have been imported so far at an estimated cost of Tk 1,970 crore and the government has earned a revenue of Tk 422 crore from it, said Lutfur Rahman, commissioner of Dhaka Customs House.

TRNB General Secretary Shamim Ahmed presented a keynote paper, while President Rashed Mehdi moderated the discussion.

Aleya Azam, a social activist, opens the 113th branch of Social Islami Bank in Netrokona on Thursday. Md Abdur Rahman, chairman of the board audit committee of the bank, was also present.

Justice still eludes Rana Plaza victims: CPD

"The miseries of the missing workers' families are double as they did not get the compensation yet," Bhattacharya said.

The government should urgently find the newly-identified missing workers' families to pay them the compensation.

According to the findings of the study, the rate of re-employment of Rana Plaza survivors is still very low, at 21.4 percent, as many of them do not want to go back to the workplace either for their physical health-related problems or mental trauma.

About 48 percent of the survivors are not fully employed, said Khondaker Golam Moazzem, additional director of research for the CPD, while presenting the findings of the study.

Regarding the improvements in workplace safety in the garment sector, he said Rana Plaza's legacy has been gradually evolving from 'poor compliance' to 'efforts towards better compliance'. Although Bangladesh's garment sector is slowly heading towards the direction of a decent working environment, the pace of the remediation works needs to speed up. Development partners may consider financing the remediationrelated works as the estimated cost for the factory repairs will be about $448 million, he added. Srinivas Reddy, country director of the International Labour Organisation, said the immediate priority after the collapse was to undertake the structural, fire and electrical inspection of the factory buildings. "The safety progress deserves appreciation," he said, adding that a large number of factories that produce for local consumption have not been inspected yet. "Each and every garment factory in Bangladesh should go for inspection and remediation. This is a major message for the country," Reddy added. Mikail Shipar, secretary to the ministry of labour and employment, said shared and rented buildings are major challenges in the factory remediation process. The other major challenges are the lack of personnel with the technical know-how and financing for acceleration of the remediation works. Establishing a harmonious relationship between the factory owners, workers and trade union leaders is also a major challenge in the sector, he added. Marcia Bernicat, US ambassador to Bangladesh, said the remediation pace is still slow in the garment factories. She said more trade and workers welfare associations are needed for a strong voice of the workers.

"I strongly protest that the garment industry in Bangladesh has been built on the back of cheap labour. They have been producing world-class garment items," Bernicat added.

While protesting an allegation from a garment maker, Rob Wayss, executive director of Accord on Fire and Building Safety in Bangladesh, asked the garment factory owners to lodge complaints to the agency's office if there is any specific complaint of corruption by any of the engineers and officials of the Accord.

"Rana Plaza building collapse was a wake-up call for us," said Faruque Hassan, vice-president of Bangladesh Garment Manufacturers and Exporters Association. Rehman Sobhan, chairman of the CPD, said garment factory owners need to give institutional recognition to workers as partners in the industry and not as casualised inputs that can be dispensed with as and when market shifts.

"They are the people who actually add value to the industry and are central to global competitiveness."

Rehman said the global market dynamics, which demands that garment exporters should constantly strive to keep their costs down, has created the problem of Rana Plaza.

In fear of losing buyers, the exporters scrimped on building materials, paying wages to workers or putting arrangements in place for workers' safety, he added.

Arshad Jamal Dipu, a former director of BGMEA, said he believes those who are conducting factory inspections are also promoting their commercial purposes.

"It has to be addressed. Otherwise, the effectiveness of this corrective action will not be there. The quality of inspections has to be ensured," he said, adding that the government should be the driving force in inspection.

Wayss of the Accord rejected the allegations of Arshad.

He said the Accord stood by the inspections done by Bangladeshi and international engineers during the initial inspection and by Bangladeshi engineers in the follow-up inspections.

He also said it is untrue that it has pushed garment factories to buy any specific service or product for remediation. "We have a list of the companies who are doing different types of work related to remediation. We state that we are not recommending and endorsing them. We have simply provided the information to the factory owners."

IndustriALL Bangladesh, the local chapter of the global union federation, said the injured should always receive medical treatment. He also said Accord and Alliance should work in Bangladesh until all the factories are fully safe. Babul and a number of other labour leaders said the money the families of the deceased and the injured had received so far from various sources cannot be termed compensation; they are grants.

Marcia said: "We also believe it is critically important for workers to have a strong and powerful voice, to be able to say 'we will not work in that building with a cracked wall' and be heard and respected."

Johan Frisell, ambassador of Sweden, said there should be effective trade unions where employees and employers can engage in effective dialogues and settle disagreements. Leoni Margaretha Cuelenaere, ambassador of the Netherlands, also spoke.

Don't boycott Bangladesh brands to wake up and realise that

"Brands' short lead times, last minute changes to production specifications, and a general lack of consideration of how their demands impact on workers put an impossible burden on the women making our clothes." "Any change in the global garment industry has to be systemic and enforceable. Acting alone will not bring about the necessary changes needed to improve the lives of garment workers," IndustriALL said. "Extolling your own corporate and social responsibility credentials is worthless, unless you are working with your competitors to change the basis on which clothes are ordered and traded." Garment factories in countries like Cambodia and Bangladesh produce for several brands, it said. If one factory raises wages in any significant way, the factory is undercut by other factories and soon goes out of business.

Act fast on regional connectivity: analysts

There needs to be a critical mass of their supply chain operations are abusive and unsustainable, it said. The Rana Plaza collapse on April 24, 2013 was a turning point for the garment industry, which showed that selfregulation and self-auditing by brands of their supplier factories had been a catastrophic failure. It made possible the Accord on Fire and Building Safety in Bangladesh -- a legally-binding agreement between global unions and over 200 multinational fashion brands -- to inspect and repair more than 1,600 garment facto-IndustriALL is now working with a group of committed brands, including Top Shop, Primark and Next, on a process called ACT, which has the potential to revolutionise the global garment supply chain. The goal is to introduce wage negotiations in garment supplying countries that involve trade unions, factories and brands on an industry-wide basis. Setting higher wages across the entire industry prevents individual factories and brands from negotiating lower prices based on lower wages, the organisation said. "To achieve this, brands must reform their purchasing practices so that factories are able to pay workers more. An industry-wide agreement also provides a means of negotiating better working conditions as well as productivity improvements."

The ACT process is already underway in Cambodia and there are plans to roll it out in Bangladesh, Myanmar and Pakistan. "Garment workers need a voice;

they need to use their collective strength to show that, without them, nothing would get made."

"That's why brands and customers must support them in their efforts to organise and fight for better pay and working conditions," IndustriALL said.
