Untreated faecal sludge puts health, environment at stake

Buet professor tells discussion

The entire volume of faecal sludge in the country is released directly into the environment with only a tiny fraction effectively treated in the capital, Prof Muhammad Ashraf Ali of Buet said at a discussion yesterday.

But innumerable households, including the posh areas of the capital's Baridhara, Banani and Gulshan, have not installed properly designed septic tanks and connected their sewage pipes to the storm drainage network that eventually carries the untreated faecal sludge (human excreta) to rivers and water bodies, the professor said.

ment of the septic tanks is not done scientifically and safely, he added. In absence of the proper pit-emptying service, the sludge is often drained into surrounding low-lying wetlands and water bodies, he said.
