The School of Business of Independent University, Bangladesh (IUB) in partnership with Centre for Business Policy Research (CBPR) and Independent University Finance and Accounting Club (IUFAC) organised a seminar titled "Building Leaders of Tomorrow" Thursday on IUB campus in the capital's Bashundhara.

Anis A Khan, managing director and chief executive officer of Mutual Trust Bank Limited, was the programme's key speaker.

Chairman of IUB Board of Trustees Mr Rashed Chowdhury and IUB VC Prof M Omar Rahman spoke at the programme, among others.

The space covered by plastic sheets and tin roofs has gradually turned into an "extension" of the kitchen market adjacent to Dhaka New Market. Actually it was a parking lot of the New Market which is thronged by thousands of people every day. The rush results in traffic chaos in the market's adjacent areas, a perennial problem compounded by roadside parking due to an absence of parking space or illegal occupation of it (as is the case here). ## Int'l conspiracy behind militancy

Says Moudud STAFF CORRESPONDENT

BNP standing committee member Moudud Ahmed yesterday alleged that international conspirators were patronising militancy and recent targeted killings in Bangladesh because the country lacked democracy now.

"Militancy will be eliminated if an inclusive general election is held and a true democratic and accountable government is installed," he told a discussion.

The BNP leader also alleged that the government was not sincere in curbing militancy.

Sammilita Peshajibi Parishad, a pro-BNP body of professionals, organised the discussion marking the shutdown of all newspapers, except four, in the country on June 16, 1975.

"An international conspiracy remains active behind the emergence of militancy in the country. It is not possible to curb militancy only with the law enforcers," Moudud said.

Highlighting the necessity of national unity to fight the challenge, he said his party would cooperate

Stop to arbitrary

forces are falling back on old habits and rounding up the 'usual suspects' instead of doing the hard work of carrying out proper investigations," said Brad Adams, Asia director at HRW.

"The government has an obligation to put an end to these murders and hold the perpetrators to account, but it must do so through proper procedures set out in its own criminal code as well as in international law."

The wave of targeted killings of bloggers, secularists, and religious minorities began in 2013 and has escalated in recent months. To date, more than 50 have been killed, often through machete attacks in public spaces.

Many of these killings have subsequently been claimed by Daesh (ISIS) or Ansar al-Islam, a Bangladeshi militant group linked to Al Qaeda, but their involvement has not been established. The Bangladesh government denies the presence of both groups in the country.

HRW said the authorities were initially slow to respond to these murders, making only a handful of arrests in a few cases. However, following the high profile murders of two gay rights activists on April 25, and the wife of a senior police officer on June 5, the government announced a new crackdown on extremists to bring an end to these killings, and the mass arrests began, it said.

On mass arbitrary arrests, it said given the well documented history of impunity for torture and other custodial abuse in Bangladesh, there was a real risk of harm during detention and interrogation.

"The mass arrest of thousands upon thousands within the course of a few days is a familiar scene in Bangladesh, but does little to inspire confidence either that these ghastly killings will stop or that due process will be followed," Adams said.
