

COVER STORY

The sisterhood of sartorial spirit!

Style is a personal thing; it is as unique and individual as one's personality. There hardly is anything more attractive than a man or a woman who knows his or her mind and has developed a strong sense of personal style. One's style is not developed in a day. It takes years of experimentation, varied life experiences and a sound sense of judgment to cultivate a personal style that is one's own. Different physical attributes and features contribute to building a set of ideas that work brilliantly for one but not for another.
