'Dead' newborn found alive

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

A probe body formed to investigate into pronouncing a newborn baby dead at a private hospital in the port city on Tuesday even though it was alive submitted its report yesterday.

Chittagong civil surgeon Azizur Rahman Siddique said after receiving the report it was sent to the director (admin) of the health directorate as per order of the director general. "I do not know what the report suggested as we did not have permission to open it," he said.

On October 4, the newborn girl was pronounced dead at Centre for Specialised Care and Research (CSCAR) but she was found to be alive. The doctors had even issued a death certificate.

The baby's parents, both of whom were doctors, accused the doctors and staff at the Neonatal Intensive Care Unit (NICU) of CSCAR of negligence of duty.

economy, speakers at the programme said it is creating jobs for the disadvantaged, empowering women, and addressing social exclusions.

Bangladeshi social enterprises are generating an average annual turnover of around Tk 21.3 crore, the survey said.
The report shows lack of technical skills as the biggest barrier to growth, followed by access to debt finance, lack of social enterprise awareness and understanding, and cash flow constraints.

Donations and grants are the most common source of funding, with few social enterprises securing concessional loans or equity. Limited capital supply is seen as the primary funding constraint.

The survey was based on sources including existing datasets and a specific survey that was developed and conducted for the research, where 149 organisations participated. The survey estimates there could be around 1.5 lakh social enterprises currently operating in Bangladesh and they have already reached approximately 207,397 beneficiaries.

Jim Scarth Obe, deputy director of British Council Bangladesh, said the reports attempt for the first time to understand the scale of social enterprise activity in the country and the sectors in which social enterprises are focused and the beneficiaries they support.

He said the reports survey the existing enabling environment for social enterprises. It looks at government activity that influences social enterprise and also compiles suggestions from the government and stakeholders.

Termining Bangladesh as a global pioneer in social enterprise, Barbara Wickham, director, British Council, Bangladesh, said, "Today there is a small but vibrant social enterprise movement in Dhaka and a relatively large amount of on-going social enterprise activity across the country."

Md Ashadul Islam, director general of NGO affairs bureau, said, "There is no legal framework for social enterprises in our bureau, which is needed for its acceleration. A proper guideline and direction from the government is also needed."

Minhaz Anwar, managing director of Better Stories Limited, presented the survey reports. A panel discussion was held afterwards where Dr Annaya Raihan, director of LifeCord, and Barrister Anita Ghazi Rahman, also spoke.

Farmers in Tala upazila used to have two or three harvests a year. But they started having one because of waterlogging due to a "wrong intervention". They lost livelihoods and they also might be evicted, as the land they used to farm is required for making a way for the power plant, said Adriano.

Evicting the Kalyanpur slum dwellers is a direct violation of the people's right to livelihoods and social networks they have built over decades.

Big challenges of these communities are lying ahead, including coping with climate change impacts, inequality and discrimination.

ActionAid with its deep-rooted experiences of working with communities in 47 countries can side with the people who are poor and excluded, Adriano said.
