

Are you being ENTERTAINED?

4-year old Namishta runs like the breeze, twin-pony tails straining to catch up with her. Her friend, three-year old Anshi chases after her, while two other similarly aged children giggle their hearts out, one clutching onto a red-coloured car toy. On the surface, it all seems to be fun and games but ask them and they'll say exactly how invested they are in their little game of "Monkey Monkey What Colour Do You Choose." A childhood favourite, the game involves a child (the 'chor' or the antagonist) choosing a colour they see and then the rest have to find and hold that colour before they are caught by the Monkey, in which case whoever is caught, for him or her, the roles are reversed.
