Anomalies in low-cost

the locals arranged a rally protesting the anomaly. Actions will be taken against them after a probe," he said.
Earlier on October 11, another dealer was arrested after stockpiling the government allotted rice and selling lower quality ones to the poor at South Surma upazila in Sylhet.
The administration also seized 3,410kg of low-quality rice from his store, and sent him to jail, said police sources.
Meanwhile, tea labourers of tea estates' in Sylhet on Thursday submitted a memorandum to the district administration demanding their inclusion in the list of the ultra-poor.
Though the tea labourers are being deprived of all facilities for years they have not been included in the list, they added.

Sixteen fishermen

"Over 500 fishermen make living from catching hilsa in the upazila," they said.
Shakhawat told The Daily Star that the government's food aid programme for the fishermen is mostly for the southern districts.
"There is no allotment for the fishermen in Sujanagar upazila. We've already informed the ministry concerned of the matter," he said.
UNB from Bhola adds, a joint team of coastguards and the fisheries department arrested 17 fishermen in two trawlers in the Meghna river in Tulatuli area of Sadar upazila yesterday on the same charge.
Asaduzzaman, senior fishery officer of the Department of Fisheries of the upazila, said the joint team conducted drives in Kachia, Kathir Matha and Bholar Khal areas.
The team also seized 20kg of hilsa, the two trawlers and 10,000 metres of current nets.
The arrestees will be produced before a mobile court, said the official.

Media should give

Addressing a session on migration, Brian said people were on the move in more numbers today due to conflicts, persecutions or economic reasons, but governments of the destinations could behave in ways that might not be acceptable. But media should not take side of governments, but reflect the voice of the people in trouble, he said.
He cited an example that a human story of a Syrian refugee helped the Australian government decide to double refugees in that country.
Indian journalist Jyoti Malhotra said during the recent India-Pakistan tension, some Indian media, especially television channels, seemed to take the government's side, more strongly than the government itself.
"It seemed they are holding AK-47s, not the microphones," she said, opposing the way of reporting that can actually trigger conflicts.
Jyoti Malhotra urged journalists to practice more people-centric reporting and become agents of change.
Lauding the role of international media during the Liberation War of Bangladesh in 1971, State Minister for Foreign Affairs Shahrar Alam said the massacre of innocent people by the Pakistani military would not have reached the global audience if the journalists did not do the right job at that challenging time.
"It was because of their reporting and editorial comments, that the attention of international community could be drawn to the untold suffering of our people," he said at the inaugural session.

Shahrar Alam said when people were suffering from a humanitarian crisis, timely information could save lives and reduce sufferings and help humanitarian groups mobilise assistance to the affected people.
Thai journalist Nithinand Yorsaengrat observed that journalists needed to be careful, objective and truthful while reporting.
Sharing reporting experiences during the earthquake, Nepalese journalist Dewan Rai said social media was a great medium of communication and rescue operations.
As the influence of social media increased, journalists need to make more use of it, subject to verification of information, he added.
Toufique Imrose Khalidi, editor-in-chief of bdnews24.com; Ikhtiyar Aslanov, ICRC head of delegation in Bangladesh; Hafiz Ahmed Mazumder, chairman of Bangladesh Red Crescent Society; Graziella Piccoli, adviser of ICRC Regional Public Relations, and Angur Nahar Monty, president of DCAB, also spoke.
