LABOUR UNREST IN ASHULIA

Garment factories reopen today

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The 59 Ashulia-based garment factories reopen today after remaining closed for over two weeks following labour unrest.

Siddiqu Rahman, president of Bangladesh Garment Manufacturers and Exporters Association (BGMEA), announced the decision at a press conference at the association's office yesterday.

"In a written statement, 30 workers' associations requested us to reopen the factories as soon as possible. The workers at the factories have also been making the same request."

"Because of the requests and also because of a directive from the prime minister, we decided to reopen the factories tomorrow [Monday]," Siddiqu said.

The workers of factories started work abstention on December 11 demanding their minimum monthly wage be increased to Tk 16,000 from Tk 5,300.

Later, the factory managements decided to shut down their units fearing a massive labour unrest and spillover of the demonstrations at the neighbouring factories.

Replying to journalists' queries, Siddiqu said the factory managements shut down their units as per labour law's 13(1) provision that says "no work no pay".

After the reopening of the factories, the managements will follow the same provision under which the workers might not receive their pays for the

AL tries to quell infighting

Looks to do some housekeeping to prepare for next national polls

PARTHA PRATIM BHATTACHARJEE and PRANABESH CHAKRABORTY

The ruling Awami League has taken initiatives to resolve intra-party conflicts for keeping its unity intact ahead of the next general elections in 2019.

As part of the initiatives, the new central committee of the AL will hold meetings with district-level leaders in phases. The move also aims at bringing back party discipline at many places, say party insiders.

The party made the move after it had some bitter experiences during local government elections held in the past when rebels, stemmed from intra-party feuds, posed serious threats to party-nominated candidates.

The AL does not want any such repetition during the general elections, they say.

The party insiders also said the recent
