New books on New Year's Day

Free school textbook distribution almost complete before year ends; students to get books from tomorrow

WASIM BIN HABIB

More than four crore students of primary and secondary schools are going to get new textbooks on the first morning of 2017, as the government has made all preparations for distributing over 36 crore copies of textbooks free of cost.

With only a day to go, almost 100 percent of 17.68 crore textbooks for secondary students and 95 percent of 10.52 crore textbooks for primary students have reached all upazilas.

Upazila education officers have been sending the books to schools and madrasas across the country over the last few weeks, say officials of the education ministry and National Curriculum and Textbook Board (NCTB).

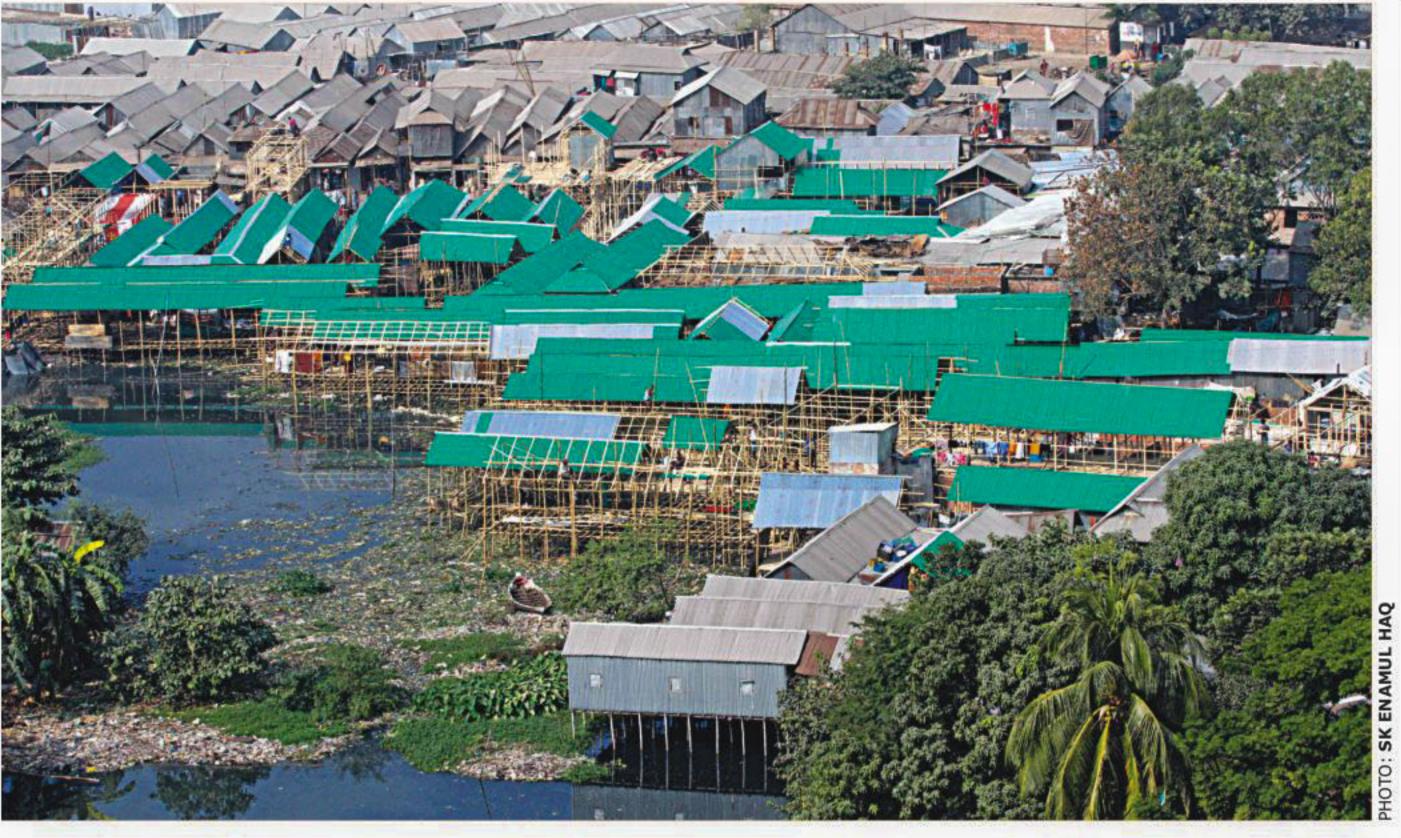

"All textbooks have been printed and dispatched to the educational institutions. The children, who will go to school on the first day of the year, will return home with a set of new textbooks," Education Minister Nurul Islam Nahid told The Daily Star yesterday.

This year, the government has printed around 36.21 crore copies of textbooks against 33.37 crore last year.

Fire-ravaged Korail slum gets new look

SHAHEEN MOLLAH and MUNTAKIM SAAD

Less than a month into a devastating fire that ripped through the Korail slum in the capital, the homeless people there are going to have a roof over their heads soon.

For the last couple of days, the Dhaka North City Corporation (DNCC) in association with Brac has been helping the slum dwellers build new houses.

The DNCC and Brac are providing bamboo, wood and colourful corrugated tin roofs to 80 affected house owners whose shanties were burnt on December 4.

The house owners are either working themselves or SEE PAGE 11 COL 2

Can Tigers end 2016 on a high?

AL-AMIN from Nelson

When Bangladesh will play their third ODI against New Zealand today, it will mark the last fixture of an eventful year for the Tigers. Although it will be a dead rubber after their defeats in the first two games, they can still turn the 'opportunity lost' syndrome scenario into something they have never done before.

The Tigers played more T20Is this year than ODIs or Tests. But the year will be remembered as an opportunity lost despite the fact they played fantastic cricket across all formats of the game. The classic example is their one-run defeat in the World T20 against India at the Chinnaswamy Stadium, where they needed two runs from the last three deliveries with Mushfigur Rahim and Mahmudullah at the crease.

Bangladesh had a tremendous home series against England, which was by far their best performance against a top team, especially in the longer version of the game. They won the second Test in dramatic fashion in Dhaka after losing a humdinger of an opening Test in Chittagong. They lost the ODI series 2-1. But the whole series turned out to be a lost opportunity SEE PAGE 2 COL 2

Fight far from over

2016 gave a wake-up call on terrorism; experts say radicalisation cannot be tackled only by force, comprehensive anti-terror approach needed

SHARIFUL ISLAM

A wake-up call to the nation, the Gulshan café siege made the government and law enforcement agencies take militancy issue seriously and declare an all-out war against terrorism. After the attack, law more worrying is some enforcers conducted pre-emptive strikes at a number of militant dens, recovered arms, ammunition and explosives and thus prevented further terror incidents.

However, the menace is far from over as, analysts say, militants might devise new strategies and launch further terror attacks, posing threat to development and social stability.

Stockpiling of suicide vests, grenades and bombs at a militant den in Ashkona suggests they are not sitting idle. Detonation of a suicide vest by a woman with a kid during the December 24 police operation there shows how desperate they can be.

With Islamic State (IS) expected to be driven out of Iraq and Syria soon, those who went to join the group may return home and try to engage in terror activities. What is > of those fighters have dual citizenship and local law enforcers have little information about them.

With targeted killings of freethinkers and people of religious minorities going on, Bangladesh in 2016 experienced a significant rise in terror attacks -- some were claimed by pro-al Qaeda outfit Ansar al Islam while the others by so-called IS.

The authorities, however, all along said those were the acts of homegrown militants. Some experts say militancy rose to such SEE PAGE 2 COL 2

NEWS ANALYSIS

2 local govt polls, 2 varying pictures

Hope for good elections dashed within a week

SHAKHAWAT LITON

Two local government bodies' elections held within seven days offered starkly distinctive features. One raised high hopes for good elections and the other frustrated with electoral irregularities.

A week ago Narayanganj City Corporation polls set a stellar example of good election. The run up to the election was peaceful. Mayor candidates nominated by the Awami League and the BNP set an example of clean electioneering by abiding by the electoral code of conduct. They also refrained from mudsling, a common phenomenon in the country's politics.

The overall peaceful atmosphere raised people's expectation for good elections. The NCC polls were also portrayed as a model election against the backdrop of severe damage to the electoral system done in the last three years by unbridled electoral irregularities. Political analysts and politicians hoped that the mode of NCC polls would have an impact on other elections, particularly the next parliamentary polls.

A torchbearer for helpless women

Sabita gifts literacy, solvency to disadvantaged women in Magura

AZIBOR RAHMAN with ANDREW EAGLE

Divorced from her husband after two years, at her instigation, and living again at her father's home, Sabita Rani Das, 22, of Magura sadar upazila's remote Laxmipur village has not had the easiest of lives. Yet where many a person would understandably focus upon their own plight and how to survive financially when her family also struggles, Sabita thinks of others. In whatever spare time she finds, she's teaching the most disadvantaged women to read, and helping them achieve economic selfreliance.

"I will never marry again," she says. "I'm determined in my own life to be self-reliant and I want to stand by other distressed women. My mission is to make them literate and solvent."

Sabita's childhood home is a meagre plot, congested and unhygienic. She studied to class nine, after which due to poverty she couldn't continue. Her father, now elderly, once maintained the family by collecting the hides of dead cattle; nowadays such hides are less available. More recently the family has taken to handicraft manufacture as a means to an income but it's barely profitable. Despite Sabita's personal hardship, local
