ENGLISH MEDIUM SCHOOLS No VAT from students

SC order brings relief to guardians

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Supreme Court yesterday ruled that the government cannot collect value-added tax (VAT) from the students of English medium schools, giving some relief to the guardians. The SC order came into effect from yesterday, said AM Aminuddin, the lawyer who moved a writ petition, filed over the issue in 2015.

However, there is no directive from the apex court about returning the money collected earlier as VAT from these students, he said.

The SC at the same time extended its stay order on the High Court verdict that declared illegal imposition of 7.5 percent VAT on tuition fees of English medium schools.

A four-member bench of the apex court headed by Chief Justice Surendra Kumar Sinha passed the order after hearing a leave to appeal petition filed by the National Board of Revenue (NBR) seeking a stay on the HC verdict.

The SC also allowed the government to move an appeal before it against the HC verdict, Deputy Attorney General SMT Monnuzaman told this newspaper.

He mentioned that the NBR has been collecting 7.5 percent tax from the English medium schools, not from students.

Guardians of the students and teachers at English medium schools hailed the SC order.

"We welcome the directive and hope that the schools will follow it," said Shaunur Hammed, a guardian who lives in the capital's Dhamondi area.

After heavy defeat, a lot to ponder

NAIMUL KARIM from Hyderabad

It will be a little cumbersome to accurately describe how Bangladesh performed in their inaugural Test in India, which ended in a 208-run defeat shortly before tea on the fifth day at the Rajiv Gandhi International Stadium in Hyderabad. While the Test did go all the way to the fifth day, one cannot actually call it a fighting performance since Bangladesh's top order failed to play a major role in either innings.

One could say that the likes of Tamim Iqbal, Soumya Sarkar and Mominul Haque actually missed a brilliant opportunity to do well on a flat deck. All they needed to do was survive the early hour and then they could have

SHAHTUL SIDDIQUE ANIK

It's called Valentine's Day.

On February 14, one is required to wish his or her beloved a Happy Valentine's Day. It is celebrated across the world with great romantic fervour and enthusiasm. Over the years, the day has become popular also in Bangladesh.

It sounds cool, right? This can indeed be an occasion to spread the message of love and peace and vow to take stance against violence.

Festivity should always be welcomed and embraced. It's good for our mind, body and soul.

But how did we get Valentine's Day anyway?

According to the most accepted version, the day is named after a priest in Rome who lived in the days of Emperor Claudius II.

He was St Valentine.

I googled and found that under the rule of

LOW-QUALITY DRUG PRODUCTION Ban stays on 20 drug companies

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The High Court yesterday upheld its earlier order that directed the government to stop the production of 20 pharmaceutical companies for producing substandard drugs.

It also directed the government to take necessary step so that 14 other pharmaceutical companies cannot produce antibiotics, as those were also below par.

Delivering the verdict on a writ petition, the HC asked the director general of the Directorate General of Drug Administration (DGDA) to monitor the activities of drug companies, see that the orders are implemented, and report to the court every three months.

The HC also formed a five-member committee to examine the products of three drug companies that have been banned from producing drugs yesterday but claim to have received Good Manufacturing Practice (GMP) recommendation from the World Health Organisation (WHO).

Ad Din Pharmaceuticals Ltd, Avert Pharma Ltd and MST Pharmaceuticals Ltd are the three companies.

The committee is comprised of a representative each from the WHO, the

IMMIGRATION BAN Trump to unveil new measures

AFP, Washington

US President Donald Trump was expected to unveil new measures on immigration in the name of keeping Americans safe, with a top aide insisting he did not overstep his authority with his controversial travel ban.

With the ban now frozen by a federal appeals court pending further legal review, Trump is "considering and pursuing all options," presidential aide Stephen Miller told "Fox News Sunday."

The White House could either file an emergency appeal to the Supreme Court, defend the merits of the order in lower courts or issue a new executive order. The last option was floated by Trump himself on Friday.

"We are contemplating new and additional actions to ensure that immigration is not a vehicle for admitting people into our country that are hostile to its nation and its values," Miller said on NBC's "Meet the Press."

"There's no such thing as judicial supremacy. What the judges did is take power away that belongs squarely in the hands of the president of the United States."

If your basic is like Virat Kohli's then you would have scored an average of 50 and you wouldn't have needed so many batsmen. You probably wouldn't have required seven wickets, four of them would have done the job and drawn the game, but unfortunately, we don't have anyone like Kohli in our team.
