

BEN & JENNIFER FILE FOR DIVORCE

Jennifer Garner and Ben Affleck have finally filed for divorce, years after they had officially split. Their divorce seems to have been done harmoniously and had no hiccups in between. Both Jennifer's petition for divorce and Ben's response were filed together, and then they met a mutual agreement. Both requested for joint custody of their children and since they did not have a pre-nup, all their assets will be divided equally unless they decide otherwise. Even in their divorce, they prove yet again how well they understand each other.

The Fairness Cream Fiasco

Abhay Deol recently started a nationwide debate with celebrities like Shahrukh Khan, Deepika Padukone and Sonam Kapoor for endorsing fairness creams. He is doing so through a series of Facebook posts, claiming that by endorsing fairness creams, the celebrities are promoting deep-rooted racism. According to him, the obsession for fair skin in Indians can be traced back to colonialism. While many applauded Deol's bravery and interest in this social issue, the same can't be said about the celebrities he made fun of through the Facebook posts. But amongst everything else, the weirdest tweet was by Uday Chopra, who stated, "What is this nonsense with fairness creams. If fairness creams are racist, then so is hair color. It's a personal choice!" Uday Chopra later became Twitter's laughing stock as many asked how he even became an actor.

Rubbed people the wrong way

Vidya Balan, known for being fearlessly outspoken, recently compared herself to Kangana in an interview. She admitted that earlier in her career, she also rubbed people the wrong way much like Kangana is doing right now due to her candor. However, she also admitted that unlike Kangana, she thankfully didn't get into any trouble. But to this day, she doesn't have any friends in the industry. Although she is very social, she only counts the people she became friends with in school and college as her true friends.
