El Nino weather conditions associated with droughts and flooding have a 50-60 percent probability of returning this year, the UN World Meteorological Organization (WMO) said yesterday. The last El Nino was in 2015-2016. The phenomenon has been linked to exacerbating droughts in the Horn of Africa, coral bleaching, the spread of the mosquito-borne Zika virus in South America two years ago.

Malaysia PM warns inequality fuelling extremism in the region

Malaysian Prime Minister Najib Razak warned yesterday that Southeast Asian countries needed to ensure their economic growth was inclusive, or risk marginalized people turning to violent extremism or even overturning political systems.

"We know that those who see no hope in their own societies are more prone to the siren calls of terrorists who can exploit their vulnerability and fill them with their lies," Najib told an entrepreneurship event during an Association of South East Asian Nations (ASEAN) summit in Manila.

Philippine President Rodrigo Duterte will chair meetings of the ASEAN leaders today. He made it clear on Thursday that Beijing's contentious activities in the South China Sea - a divisive topic that figures at most ASEAN meetings - would not be discussed, because it would achieve nothing.

Indonesia's Marsudi said the South China Sea issue was discussed among her counterparts but the focus was on completing guidelines for negotiating an ASEAN-China maritime code of conduct.

ASEAN Secretary General, Le Luong Minh, said the code needed to be legally binding to put a stop to "unilateral actions", because a previous commitment to play fair had been ignored.

"It's important ... because of the complex developments in the South China Sea, especially the reclamation and militarization activities and all those unilateral actions," Minh told Reuters in an interview.

S Korea rejects Trump demand

AFP, Seoul

Seoul yesterday brushed aside US President Donald Trump's suggestion it should pay for a $1 billion missile defence system the two allies are installing in South Korea to guard against threats from the North.

The first parts of the Terminal High Altitude Area Defense (THAAD) system have already been delivered to a former golf course in the South -- infuriating China -- at a time of heightened tensions over Pyongyang's nuclear and missile programmes.

Top US officials have said THAAD will be operational "within days".

"I informed South Korea it would be appropriate if they paid. It's a billion-dollar system," Trump was quoted as saying by the Reuters news agency. "It's phenomenal, shoots missiles right out of the sky."

The two countries have been in a security alliance since the 1950-53 Korean war, and more than 28,000 US troops are stationed in the South.

Seoul retorted that under the Status of Forces Agreement that governs the US military presence in the country, the South would provide the THAAD site and infrastructure while the US would pay to deploy and operate it.

"There is no change to this basic position," South Korea's defence ministry said in a statement.

The row comes with tensions high on the Korean peninsula following a series of missile launches by the North and warnings from the Trump administration that military action was an "option on the table".

Trump said there was "a chance" of "a major, major conflict" with the North -- which would put the South, whose capital is within range of Pyongyang's artillery, at risk of horrific casualties.

But earlier this week Washington said it would seek stronger sanctions against Pyongyang and held open the possibility of negotiations, with US Pacific Command chief Admiral Harry Harris saying it wanted to bring leader Kim Jong-Un "to his senses, not to his knees".

The White House also wants China to do more to rein in the North, with Trump saying he believed leader Xi Jinping was "trying very hard".

Chinese foreign ministry spokesman Geng Shuang told reporters that the two presidents had been "in constant touch with each other", which was "good for the two countries and also for the whole world".

But Beijing has been infuriated by the THAAD deployment, which it fears weakens its own ballistic capabilities and says upsets the regional security balance.

Hamid Mir to return award to Bangladesh

AGENCIES

Pakistani journalist Hamid Mir on Thursday announced that he will be returning an award given to his father, Waris Mir, in 2013, by Bangladesh Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina.

Speaking on a private TV channel, Mir said the award was given under false pretense that the Bangladeshi government wanted better relations with Pakistan, adding that PM Sheikh Hasina deceived the recipients of the award.

The awards were presented by the Bangladeshi premiere to honour those who had spoken against the military operation in 1971 that led to the creation of East Pakistan.

"Instead of improving relations, as promised to us, she has deteriorated them further. With these awards she has deceived us."

"The awards given to the Pakistanis, who because of their own conviction opposed the 1971 military operation, now seem like symbols of deceit."

"I am left with no choice but to say that I think, along with kind regards, we should all return these symbols of deceit (the awards) back to (PM) Hasina. I, for one, will definitely be doing so."

Mir reminisced shared history between the two countries; adding that he had travelled to Dhaka - where All India Muslim League first began - to accept the accolade on behalf of his father, assuming she wanted improved relations.

He expressed disappointment on the PM further worsening ties between the two countries instead of aiding improvement. He further added that an example of PM Hasina going back on her words is the country's refusal to send the Bangladesh cricket team to Pakistan again.

Brexit talks must settle 'people, money, Ireland' first: Tusk

AFP, Brussels

EU President Donald Tusk yesterday said that Britain must first settle the divorce issues of "people, money and Ireland" before any talks on a post-Brexit trade deal.

In a letter to the other 27 European Union leaders ahead of a key summit today, Tusk said that "before discussing our future, we must first sort out our past."

The EU 27 are set to adopt guidelines for the negotiations on Brexit at the summit, following British Prime Minister Theresa May's formal triggering of the two-year divorce process last month.

Former Polish premier Tusk said the "only possible approach" was phased talks, in which Britain must make "sufficient progress" on the divorce issues before negotiations on future ties.

May wants to discuss the divorce settlement and a trade deal at the same time ahead of Britain's exit from the bloc in March 2019.

The EU says the key issues are the fate of three million EU citizens living in Britain and one million Britons resident in the EU as well as Britain's exit bill estimated at around 60 billion euros ($65 million).

Tusk also called for action to avoid a "hard border" between the Republic of Ireland and the British province of Northern Ireland.

A senior EU official said a key part of the summit would involve defining what "sufficient progress" means, with some states wanting to move on to the trade talks phase more quickly than others.

Leaders will also discuss the relocation of two EU agencies currently based in Britain -- the European Banking Authority and European Medicines Agency -- which several EU states are bidding to host.

Tusk's comments come a day after a war of words between British premier May and German Chancellor Angela Merkel over the two years of negotiations.

Merkel said Britain should not have "illusions" about getting favourable treatment. But May hit back by accusing the EU 27 of planning to "line up to oppose us."

'Spring offensive' starts

Taliban launch annual 'killing season' in Afghanistan

AFP, Kabul

The Afghan Taliban launched their "spring offensive" yesterday, heralding fresh fighting in the drawn-out conflict as embattled security forces struggle to recover from a devastating attack on a military base one week ago.

Operation Mansouri -- named after the group's former leader, killed in a US drone strike in 2016 -- will target foreign forces with "conventional attacks, guerrilla warfare, complex martyrdom attacks, insider attacks", an insurgent statement said.

"The enemy will be targeted, harassed, killed or captured until they abandon their last posts," it continued.

The annual spring offensive normally marks the start of the "fighting season", though this winter the Taliban continued to battle government forces, most successfully in last week's attack on the military base outside the northern city of Mazar-i-Sharif, which killed at least 135 young recruits.

With more than one third of Afghanistan outside of government control, civilians also continue to bear a heavy brunt, with thousands killed and wounded each year with children paying an increasingly disproportionate price, according to UN figures.

Afghanistan's Interior Ministry shrugged off the Taliban threats yesterday, saying the offensive was "not something new".

The Taliban statement claimed this year will be different, however, vowing a political approach in areas it controls that will focus on state-building and "establishing mechanisms for social justice and development".

The Taliban announcement comes days after Pentagon chief Jim Mattis visited Kabul as the Trump administration seeks to craft a new strategy in Afghanistan.

'Miss my old life'

Trump says he thought US presidency 'would be easier'

CNN ONLINE

President Donald Trump, reflecting on a first 100 days in office that has featured no major legislative wins and low approval ratings, said Thursday he thought the job would be easier.

"I loved my previous life, I loved my previous life. I had so many things going," Trump said in an interview with Reuters. "I actually, this is more work than my previous life. I thought it would be easier."

He added, "I do miss my old life. This -- I like to work. But this is actually more work."

Trump also said he misses his pre-presidency freedom -- a sentiment often expressed by Oval Office occupants who find themselves in the security bubble of the White House.

The president said he missed being able to take the wheel.

"I like to drive," Trump told Reuters. "I can't drive any more."

Trump has admitted his surprise at the complexity of some of the issues in his in-tray during his brief time in office so far. In February, he noted with some exasperation the complexity of the nation's health care laws -- which he has vowed to reform as part of a bid to scrap Obamacare.

Trump also marvelled at the intricacies of the geopolitics of the Korean peninsula, a subject that China's President Xi Jinping was happy to tutor him on.

"After listening for 10 minutes, I realized it's not easy," Trump told the Wall Street Journal.

"I felt pretty strongly that they had a tremendous power (over) North Korea ... But it's not what you would think."

UK on heightened alert

AFP, London

British police warned yesterday they were facing an "increased level of terrorist activity", the day after a knifeman was arrested near parliament and a woman was shot in a separate police raid.

Just weeks after the attack on the Houses of Parliament that left five people dead and scores injured, London is once again on high alert as Britain prepares for a snap election on June 8.

"Yesterday was an extraordinary day in London," Deputy Assistant Commissioner Neil Basu said, after confirming six arrests overnight.

"I wanted to reassure the public that this increased level of terrorist activity is being matched by our action... We are making arrests on a near daily basis."
