At first glance it might look like a queue of guardians to take their children home after school. But it is actually a gathering of anxious parents for making sure that the children were able to jot down everything taught in the classes. Inset, Some of the guardians also take pictures of the notes taken by other students in case their kids missed anything. This has become an everyday scenario in front of many schools in the port city. But amid all these anxiousness, no one seemed to remember that education should be a mixture of learning and fun, especially for shaping young minds already over-burdened with study. The photos were taken in front of a school in Jamal Khan area recently.
