Bagerhat's Chitra river forest at risk

Poaching, conflict between wild animals and poultry farms threaten biodiversity

Approximately one hundred kilometres north of the Sundarbans along the banks of Bagerhat's Chitra River is a newer forest which has emerged over the past decade. Locally known as the 'Mini Sundarbans', the tidal forest of keora mangrove-apple trees, sundari mangroves and nipa palms located in Chitalmari upazila is a natural haven for wildlife, including migratory birds. The ecosystem's integrity is far from secure however, with bird poachers increasingly active and because wild animals in search of food are coming into conflict with nearby poultry farms.

"There are a variety of animal species in the forest," says Vanjori Biswas from adjacent Dumuria village. "The forest is their kingdom. But if the animals sense an opportunity they snatch chickens. Now and then villagers kill the animals to protect their poultry."

The Mini Sundarbans is home to populations of jungle cat, fishing cat and Bengal monitor lizard, all of which are prone to prey on domestic birds and their eggs. The death of these animals at the hands of villagers is gradually putting their local populations at risk.

Meanwhile, the migratory birds which take shelter in the forest during the winter months face the challenge of poachers. "Dishonest people sometimes trap or shoot wild birds," says Jalil Sheikh from Khiligati village beside the forest.

Among the myriad of avian species to be found in the forest are doves, pigeons, magpie-robins, cranes and hawks. It is also a popular habitat for bats.

As for aquatic species, dolphins can be seen time to time in the river, though due to siltation and declining river navigability the environment is less suitable for dolphins than once it was.

"The forest must be kept as a sanctuary for birds and other wildlife," says District Forest Officer Saidul Islam. "I will visit the area as soon as possible to take necessary steps to protect the forest."

Bagerhat Deputy Commissioner Tapan Kumar Biswas says that all kinds of measures are being taken to increase awareness of the need to protect fauna. "If anybody is killing wild animals, stern action will be taken against them," he says.

Hard days for Kurigram bamboo craft artisans

Artisans of bamboo items are worried due to low sales and absence of customers in the district's weekend haats (markets) as they do not have any alternative source of income.

Very little sale is compelling them to maintain their families by taking loans. Some of them go to Dhaka for earning money during this time of the year.

Some artisans at Kathalbari haat in Sadar upazila told this correspondent about their work and seasonal hard time (July to September) when he recently visited the haat and saw no customers.

They make bamboo products like darki (tool for catching fish), ghorpa (cage for keeping poultry), pigeon cage, duli (large pot for keeping paddy), winnowing-tray, winnowing-fan, winnowing-net, mat, hand-fan, basket, jhapi (large hat) and darpalla (scales).

Mozammel Haque, 55, of Barobari

union in Lalmonirhat, said, "I bought one wicker tray for domestic use. In this season, there is no need for bamboo products, but I need to buy some bamboo items during paddy harvesting time every season."

Mukul Chandra Das, 38, of Shibrum village in Kathalbari union under Sadar upazila said, "We maintain our families by making bamboo handicraft as we have no cultivable land. This is a permanent job for our Das community."

"Most of our bamboo products are used in the agro-based works. Harvesting period of any crop is a good time for our business," Mukul said.

"The products are made with makla variety of bamboo. Farmers normally do not sell bamboo as this season (June-August) is its reproduction period," he added.

Sumon Chandra Das, 18, said, "Our family of nine members depends on the bamboo-craft business. All our family members are involved in producing bamboo items. We sell our products in various local markets."

Taposh Tarani Das, 23, said, "I am passing a hard time now as our bamboo-craft business is not going well. So, I have decided to go to Dhaka for earning money by pulling rickshaw during the hard time (up to September)."

Bamboo artisan Radha Rani Das, 46, wife of Karendra Taroni Das of the village, said, "My family of nine members is maintained by making and selling bamboo items. Now, the sale of our bamboo products has decreased a lot. Sometimes we take meals only once a day."

"I have already taken loan of Tk 20,000 from my neighbours. I will repay it with interest after some months when I sell my products," Radha Rani said.

"I do not know how to take loan for my handicraft business from a government organisation. I think I could bring solvency in my family if I got government loan for making bamboo-craft," she added.
