

Suu Kyi's cowardly speech

THE de facto leader of our next-door neighbour, Aung San Suu Kyi's address on Tuesday surprised no one. She echoed the same old rhetoric that has been used time and again to displace the Rohingyas. The use of carefully crafted semantics in her much-awaited public speech on the mass exodus of Rohingyas that began in late August lent a softer tone to Myanmar's otherwise hostile attitude. She reinforced her government's commitment to restore "peace, stability and rule of law", invited her foreign friends to "join us in our endeavours" and said that visits can be arranged so that those who have chosen to stay back in their villages can tell the world why they have not fled. Her speech would give one the impression that the Myanmar government is finally taking a conciliatory approach to resolving the crisis—that is, if you ignore the multitude of baseless assertions disguised as facts and figures.

As journalists, aid workers, volunteers, and law enforcement officials in Bangladesh duly do their part to bring some relief to the refugees who have witnessed more violence than anyone should in a lifetime, Suu Kyi presented "facts" concocted by her government that basically sent the message "it's not as bad as it looks." Making sure to not once refer to the refugees as "Rohingya", with the exception of using the word only when talking about ARSA (Arakan Rohingya Salvation Army), Suu Kyi and her government want the world to know that the term "Rohingya" must be used only when referring to a terrorist group. Forget citizenship—terrorism is the only thing that the Myanmar government is willing to attribute to the entire Rohingya population.

A list of the numerous claims made by Suu Kyi has been compiled and debunked by CNN. This includes her assertions that "the great majority of Rakhines have not joined the exodus" and "50 percent of the villages of Muslims are intact." Her conscious choice of not using the word "Rohingya" and referring to them simply as "Muslim" makes it hard to verify whether she is talking about the Rohingyas or the state's entire Muslim population. She also said that Muslims satellite imagery by Amnesty International revealed that Rohingya villages were burnt even after September 5, and photos taken after that date by different agencies and photojournalists of this newspaper from the Bangladesh side of the border show columns of smoke rising from villages (including those of Maungdaw district). Without full investigation into the origin of the fires—Amnesty International termed it Myanmar government's "scorched-earth policy"—Suu Kyi's claims, which of its own with a third of the country under water, the exodus of more than 40,000 Rohingya refugees at the Bangladesh-Myanmar border is the last thing we needed. With refugee camps bursting at the seams and relief efforts haphazard at best, tackling this humanitarian disaster is proving to be unimaginably difficult.

But the plight of the Rohingyas has always registered sympathy in Muslim-majority Bangladesh. The Bangladesh government's courageous move to open commitment, or rather the absence of it, is meaningless in the face of the enormous human tragedy on the other side of the border. With our back against the wall, we had to open our borders. And we did the right thing.

Refugee arrivals might have slowed down to a trickle but the real work has only just begun. Aid agencies are overwhelmed. The conditions are dire. Camps are overpopulated, with families crammed in makeshift tents that leak during the rain making it impossible to sleep. Children are going days without food. People wait in long queues only to return empty-handed. The water, sanitation and health situation is just as abysmal. Now that the focus has somewhat shifted from the macro to the micro i.e. from the unprecedented influx of Rohingya refugees to the herculean task of actually dealing with the crisis (containing spread of diseases, coordinating aid, etc.), new issues are surfacing every day.

But despite all that we have done and are doing, Suu Kyi, in her first public speech since August 25, far from acknowledging the need to work with the Bangladesh government and the latter's concerns as a nod of respect, chose to denounce "all human rights violations"—straight out of the "All Lives Matter" playbook. Suu Kyi's speech was not only "disappointing" but also cowardly. It towed the typical line of "we have to look at both sides", completely oblivious to the power dynamics at play: the national army versus a dispossessed population.

Then there's the façade of not fearing "international scrutiny" which is simply another rhetorical tool to dismiss legitimate criticism. Why did Suu Kyi then fail to be present at the UN General Assembly if there's nothing to be afraid of? Her "well-thought-out" speech, laced with lie after lie, goes to show that Myanmar's intentions with respect to the Rohingyas are not going to change anytime soon. And we shouldn't fall for it.

Nahela Nowshin is a member of the editorial team, The Daily Star.

PHOTO: KEYSTONE

INDIA'S WOMEN'S RESERVATION BILL

Steps to empower women

BETWEEN THE LINES

FOR some reasons, mainly male chauvinism, the Women's Reservation Bill has not yet been passed by parliament. It was introduced in the Lok Sabha for the first time in 1996 when the then Prime Minister, Deve Gowda, was in office. As in the past, the bill was marked by high drama and hit roadblocks in each of its outings in Parliament before the historic measure cleared the first legislative hurdle in 2010.

The bill called for reserving 33 percent of the seats in the Lok Sabha and all state legislative assemblies for women. As per the draft, the seats were to be reserved for women on a rotation basis and would be determined by draw of lots in such a way that a seat would be reserved only once in three consecutive general elections. The draft stated that reservation of seats for women would cease to exist 15 years after the commencement of the amendment Act.

In fact, the 108th Constitution Amendment Bill, or what was popularly known as the Women's Reservation Bill, completed 21 years of being in existence last week on September 12. In all these years, it managed to get only the assent of the Rajya Sabha, thus far. In the last two decades the bill has seen much drama in both houses of parliament, clearly aimed at scuttling the measure, with some members even attempting to physically attack the then Rajya Sabha chairman Hamid Ansari to disrupt its tabling.

The battle for greater representation to women in the Lok Sabha and state assemblies was routinely punctuated, thanks to frayed tempers and war of words among members which, at times, got physical ever since different governments tossed around the bill passed for various reasons without success.

The bill, however, failed to get the approval of the house and was instead referred to a joint parliamentary committee. The committee submitted its report to the Lok Sabha soon after and in 1998, Atal Bihari Vajpayee, who headed the first National Democratic Alliance government, reintroduced the bill in the Lok Sabha. After M Thambidurai, then Law Minister, introduced the bill in the House, a Rashtriya Janata Dal MP snatched it from the Speaker and tore it into pieces. Thereafter, the bill lapsed every time the House was dissolved and was reintroduced by the government of the day in 1999, in 2002 and 2003.

Unfortunately, however, over the years a number of male parliamentarians have opposed the passing of the bill, leaving it in its current state. Even though the Congress, the Left and the BJP were heard openly pledging support for the bill, it just couldn't be passed in the Lok Sabha. No doubt, the Vajpayee government was certainly dependent on other parties for survival in 1998, which many political observers often suggest was the reason for not being able to assert itself.

However, after the 1999 mid-term polls, even though Vajpayee came back to power, the mandate was for the National Democratic Alliance (NDA) which won 303 of the 544 Lok Sabha seats. This time Vajpayee was pushed into a situation where he had to keep all the parties together. Yet, given the support from the Congress and Left, the bill would have sailed through the House had it been formally put to vote. But that was not to be.

Just before the Lok Sabha elections in reservations for women in Vidhan Sabhas and in the Lok Sabha." In 2005, BJP announced complete support for the bill.

In 2008, the Manmohan Singh government introduced the bill in the Rajya Sabha. Two years later on March 9, 2010, a huge political barrier was overcome when it was passed by the House in spite of high drama and

ILLUSTRATION: SORIT

2004, Vajpayee blamed Congress for stalling the bill and said that the BJP and its allies would pass the legislation after getting a decisive mandate in 2004 elections. In 2004, the UPA government had included it in the Common Minimum Programme, which said: "The UPA government will take the lead to introduce legislation for one-third scuffles between members. The BJP, the Left and some other parties came together with the ruling Congress to help pass it in the upper house.

Seven years have passed since that moment when top women leaders from the three major parties—Sonia Gandhi, Sushma Swaraj and Brinda Karat—gave a rare moment to media photographers by walking hand in hand in impromptu celebration of that historic occasion. And yet, in 2017, it has still not seen the light of the day, simply because the political will to help make it a law has been lacking in the lower house. The UPA II government, in spite of having 262 seats in the Lok Sabha, too couldn't make it happen, citing the same excuse of being in a coalition.

Fortunately, the BJP does not suffer from that handicap. The party has the strength and can pass the bill. Prime Minister Narendra Modi is also determined to get the legislation on his table. But I would be surprised if the bill becomes an act. Male parliamentarians in all parties do not want to share power with women. They do not treat them with dignity at home, they believe that women should not be empowered beyond a limit.

True, Modi for the first time has appointed a woman as the country's Defence Minister. This is a huge departure from the past. But both defence and foreign affairs going to women is definitely a bold step taken by Prime Minister Modi. These are indications of a positive thinking on Modi's part.

My only hope is that Modi would stay as determined as he is today to have the bill passed in parliament. Some people say that this is a measure only to get the votes of women with the 2019 general elections beckoning. Whatever the reasons, the women would be able to play an important role in the affairs of India if they are in substantial number in the Lok Sabha.

Kuldip Nayar is an eminent Indian columnist.

CROSSWORD BY THOMAS JOSEPH

ACROSS

- 1 Highlander
- 34 Relaxing site
- 35 Binary base
- 36 Carnival city
- 37 Recipe units
- 40 TV's DeGeneres
- 41 Burn a bit
- 42 Marsh plants
- 43 Reduced amount
- 18 Something you shouldn't quit
- 20 Artery problem
- 21 "... and — a good night"
- 22 Turner of movies
- 23 Baseball's Pee Wee
- 25 Odometer unit
- 28 Personnel
- 31 Surrounded by
- 32 Noted traitor
- 33 Learn completely
- 34 Togetherness
- 35 Former Spanish coin
- 36 Fix shoes
- 37 Wood-working tools
- 38 Leto of "suicide Squad"
- 39 Tidy
- 40 Razor sharpeners
- 41 Learn completely
- 42 Stab
- 43 Capris
- 44 Action
- 45 Cud
- 46 Toa
- 47 Lout
- 48 Panes
- 49 Parse
- 50 Poodles
- 51 Implored
- 52 Inge
- 53 Near
- 54 Seeds
- 55 Errs

DOWN

- 1 Like some communities
- 2 Ark's landing site
- 3 Beginning stage
- 4 "Very funny!" in a text
- 5 Losing plan
- 6 Curry on TV
- 7 Foldertype
- 8 Lion
- 9 Stymies
- 10 Knight wear
- 11 Fix shoes
- 12 Plain silly
- 13 Recroom game
- 14 Wood-working tools
- 15 Mess up
- 16 Flopped down
- 17 British verb
- 18 Something you shouldn't quit
- 19 Leto of "suicide Squad"
- 20 Tosses
- 21 "I've been on my feet all day"
- 22 Turn of movies
- 23 Baseball's Pee Wee
- 24 "I can't go off front of this support!"
- 25 Learn completely
- 26 Stab
- 27 Prone
- 28 To give an example
- 29 Tosses
- 30 Tosses
- 31 "We love our soldiers"
- 32 Noted traitor
- 33 Rxamounts
- 34 Toe
- 35 Addition column
- 36 Went first
- 37 "You look tired"
- 38 Went first
- 39 Motorneed
- 40 "I can't go off front of this support!"
- 41 "Support our troops"
- 42 "Go army!"
- 43 Reduced amount
- 44 "I've been on my feet all day"
- 45 "We love our soldiers"
- 46 "Support our troops"
- 47 "Go army!"
- 48 "I can't go off front of this support!"
- 49 "We love our soldiers"
- 50 "Support our troops"
- 51 "Go army!"
- 52 "I can't go off front of this support!"
- 53 "We love our soldiers"
- 54 "Support our troops"
- 55 "Go army!"

YESTERDAY'S ANSWER

H	E	E	L	S	L	A	P	S
E	L	B	A	C	A	P	R	I
L	I	O	N	A	C	T	O	N
M	O	N	D	A	L	E	C	U
S	T	Y	M	I	E	S	T	O
I	N	S	T	O	A
S	T	I	N	T	O
P	A	N	E	C	O
I	M	P	O	D	R
E	L	A	I	N	G
S	E	C	R	E	T
Y	E	N	A	R	E
S	E	E	D	R	E

BEETLE BAILEY

BY MORT WALKER

BABY BLUES

BY KIRKMAN & SCOTT

Quotable Quote

W.G. SEBALD
Vertigo
GERMAN WRITER AND ACADEMIC

How I wished during those sleepless hours that I belonged to a different nation, or better still.

Quotable Quote

W.G. SEBALD
Vertigo
GERMAN WRITER AND ACADEMIC

How I wished during those sleepless hours that I belonged to a different nation, or better still.