Speaks Out Against Harrassment in Hollywood!

Amber Tamblyn recently spoke out against the harassment faced by women in Hollywood. She wrote a piece for The New York Times where she criticized James Woods as well as Hollywood for calling women who faced harassment as "liars". In the article titled I Am So Done with Not Being Believed, she recounts her own story from teen years, when the former Shark star hit on her and her friends in a diner. She also mentioned the time when she was 21 years old and was being harassed by a crew member. When she complained to a producer about it, the producer said, "Well, there are always two sides to a story." In her article, Amber discussed how women are still objectified and treated like second-class citizens in the world of showbiz and whenever they speak out against it, they are labeled as liars to suppress and shut them up. Amongst all the talk of equal pay for women in Hollywood, her article shed a lot of light on how far Hollywood really is giving women the rights they deserve.

SIMRAN

Beats Out Lucknow Central

Amongst all the controversies about Kangana Ranaut's relationship with Hrithik Roshan and Aditya Pancholi, the much talked-about Simran was released. Although Kangana was criticized for using the details of her personal life to create controversies in promoting the film, Simran ended up faring well at the box office until now. The film has beat out Farhan Akhtar's Lucknow Central on the opening day with a collection of Rs.10.56 Crore and has also collected more over the weekend. However, given that it is a Rs.30 Crore film, it isn't safe to call it a hit yet. 2017 truly is a dull year for the box office, as high budget films with the Khans (like Raees and Tubelight) failed to meet their expectations. If 2017 has proved anything, it is that the Indian audience is becoming smarter with better taste in films. Recycling the same old Bollywood masala films with a Khan in it isn't enough to impress them anymore.
