12 gang members

ADC Abu Baker, who led the drive, said they suspect that a huge amount of money might have been laundered elsewhere.
Police also did not find any legal documents of the organisation.
He said the gang has three offices in Dhaka's Banani, Chittagong and Sylhet and also a small branch office in Comilla. In Chittagong city alone, the racket has 41 outlets for selling the tickets.
ADC said police is investigating if the money is used in funding militancy.
The gang changes its office frequently, said the ADC, adding that the racket had changed its office five times since it started operation in Chittagong city in 2011.
He said one Nurul Islam Molla is the chairman of the PRDF. While visiting the office in Khulshi, a trade licence of Dhaka North City Corporation was found hanging on the wall of the office. The licence was issued against Nurul Islam Molla.
Police are trying to trace the kingpin of the racket, the ADC added.

Repatriation must be UN-brokered

A/H Mahmood Ali on October 2.
The Myanmar delegation offering to take back the newly arrived Rohingyas, not the other around 400,000, who fled Myanmar violence in the previous years.
Major initiatives of Rohingyas activists, who are called the most persecuted ethnic population in the world, took place in 1978, 1991-92, 2001 and 2016.
Under bilateral agreements and with active support of the UN refugee agency, many of the Rohingyas were repatriated. However, the repatriation has totally stalled since 2005.
Prof Ahrar said now the Myanmar delegation has come to Bangladesh for talks only to show the world they were working on the issue with Bangladesh, and that the international community need not worry. Once international pressure comes down, Myanmar will fix its own way of avoiding the issue like it has been doing over the years, he said.
Bangladesh foreign ministry officials said Myanmar did not want to engage the UN refugee agency in the repatriation process. Back in Rakhine, the UN and other international agencies are still barred from operating any humanitarian aid campaign for Rohingyas. Such a stance of Myanmar has created serious doubts among political and foreign affairs analysts.
In an interview with The Daily Star on October 4, the head of UN Office of the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA) Mark Lowcock said one had to ask this serious question why Myanmar did not want to engage international community when UN bodies acted with international humanitarian law, neutrality and independence.

CR Ahrar said even when the Myanmar delegation was holding meeting in Dhaka, Rohingyas were fleeing into Bangladesh. That means they did not feel safe there anyway despite Su Kyu's claim that security forces stopped their operations on September 5, he said.
"Repatriating Rohingyas to Myanmar now is nothing but sending the chicken to the slaughterhouse," he added.
A law professor at Dhaka University, Dr. Mizanur Rahman, said the UN Security Council meeting last week proved that it was divided. Though the US, UK and France talked tough against Myanmar, China and Russia did not. This means Myanmar has been able to convince the latter two countries in their favour, he said.
"In no way will it be wise to go ahead with the Rohingya issue bilaterally," he told The Daily Star. According to him, such a global momentum has never been created in history for resolving the Rohingya problem in Rakhine. And, this opportunity should be utilised in the best possible manner, he added.
Engagement of the international community is a must for a durable solution, he said. The international community, at least a UN body like UNHCR or International Organization for Migration (IOM), will have to be engaged in the registration and repatriation process to make the whole affair credible and acceptable, said Dr. Mizanur.
He also suggested active involvement of the UN or other international organisations to strongly monitor what and how Myanmar is creating an enabling environment in Rakhine where Rohingyas will feel confident to return and flourish.
OCHA Chief Mark Lowcock said immediate cessation of atrocities, providing humanitarian organisations access across Rakhine and eventually implementing the Kofi Annan Commission's recommendations including ending all sorts of discriminations against the Rohingyas were the most important jobs Myanmar needed to do.
CR Ahrar said Bangladesh must ask Myanmar to stop genocide and ethnic cleansing. It has to vigorously mobilise global support, he added.
Unless discriminatory practices are stopped and Myanmar eventually provides citizenship to Rohingyas, he said, "I don't see any hope that the problem will ever be solved."

Muskan hopes for cure

Still, there were times the first-grader at Sonar Bangla Cadet Model School in Rugganj was having trouble speaking due to the pain in her right arm. She cannot use the arm anymore due to the swelling.
"The school was only 200 yards from our home. But I could not go there alone," she said. "My grandmother used to help me..."
"Since I got admitted here, my teachers and classmates wished me a speedy recovery," she paused and added, "I miss them."

"I never missed my classes. I was never late. I want to go back to school again," said the resilient girl.
Her grandmother, Halima Begum, said Muskan lives with her. Muskan's father, Shaikh Islam Sumon, is a Saudi expatriate while her mother, Yasmin Akhter, left home around four years ago when Sumon remarried.
