LS EDITOR'S NOTE

Hallelujah...It's raining men!

We have been accused in the past of gender bias, for our 'blatant' coverage of women's issues, ignoring the demands of men.

This week, we are determined to shatter that so-called gender bias! Feel a flavour of the teenage 'bro-code', but let LS show that the 'bro code' is a bonding for a lifetime. I personally feel that this intimate connection between friends is very important. Just like most girls can share her intimate matters to her best female friend; men too, often need and create that space, without talking much about it!

This neutral space is where you can be yourself without prejudices, where you can relax and put up your feet on the table or forget the toilet seat, watch sports or talk rubbish; this space acts like a breather. You cannot expect a person to be on guard all the time. The girlfriends or wives in their lives cannot be expected to mummy them and keep a tab on them at all times; he is your partner not your child. I personally feel if you dictate terms to him then you should be prepared to be dictated as well. Plain and simple. He needs his boys just like you need your girls.

In fact, 'his space, her space and our space' is what a healthy relationship is all about. And having and respecting this need for space is of utmost importance if you and your man want to live happily ever after.

Happy reading and do not forget to try the recipes.

REVIEW

Living in a material world

Samuel Hoque's A/W collection is as maximalist as it gets. If you're getting FOMO thinking about Sabyasachi's collab with Louboutin, consider: those blinged up red-soled sneakers and slides are cool, but there's homegrown talent that's bringing the heat this season. Samuel Hoque's sumptuous A/W menswear collection is making ripples for all the right reasons.

After the muslin/jamdani overlay coatees from his Summer collection became a runaway hit last season, Hoque got bolder about experimenting with local fabrics, despite the fact that they are, as the designer himself confesses, much harder to cut than your usual menswear materials. The result is stunning: from jamdani overlays on his custom-fitted bomber jackets, to experiments on his signature coatees, which involve such inventive details such as embossed leather, sleek velvet, and giant leather sequins.

Hoque's background is in textile design, and the British-based Bangladeshi designer flexes those muscles through unique signature prints around avian and apian motifs, tropical prints and hothouse florals, rendered in fresh and exciting ways. You'll find them sprinkled liberally over his loungewear, peeking from beneath gauzy muslin and sheer jamdani on his bombers and waistcoats, or popping up in unexpected places on his panjabis and long shirts.

The studied visuals, with the tactile element of unexpected fabrics used in new, exciting ways, Samuel's designs are great to look at and to touch, and even better to wear and flaunt. The designer's Instagram account has mini videos showcasing the mesmerising way these beauties move.

What really makes the collection worth exploring is the designer's painstaking attention to detail. As far as cut and structure go, the designs are actually pretty simple, solid, and fuss-free, based on a foundation of killer fits of well-loved basics, relying on the strength of the prints and textures to make the outfits stand out. It is this sensibility that elevates the clothes beyond everyday prêt — they're distinctive, eye-catching, but ultimately very wearable.

Give your wardrobe a touch of oomph this season with one of these daring designs. Samuel Hoque's Style Sanctum is located at 32, Progoti Shoroni, Bashundhara J Block.

PURNAVA EGG FEST

In the current context when children are more attracted to unhealthy meals than nutritious ones, eggs can bridge that gap.

The objective of the daylong celebration by Purnava is to create a positive, scientific image of egg, busting myths. The event will have kiosks offering healthy foods, dishes made from eggs, healthy drinks, desserts, etc.

There will be also be provisions for basic medical check-ups; book reading sessions, yoga sessions conducted by Anika Rabbani, Magic show by Asgar;
