OUR CORRESPONDENT, Moulvibazar

People in Habiganj at a rally yesterday demanded punishment to those who grabbed rivers and built structures on the Khowai and Sutang rivers.

They held the rally in Khowai Mukh area under Habiganj district town with a slogan dredge the Khowai for water flow year round (Khowai Nodi Khonon Chai, Sara Bochor Pani Chai).

Habiganj unit Bangladesh Paribesh Andolon (BAPA) and Khowai River Waterkeeper organised the rally.

They also symbolically floated paper boats on the river.

Khadija Akther of Dhuliakhal area said the river has become very narrow and dirty, adding that one cannot walk near it due to the bad odour from the garbage. Anyone swimming in the river will suffer from water borne diseases, she said.

Tofazzal Sohel of Khowai River Waterkeeper said farmers in the nearby villages have abandoned paddy farming due to irrigation problem and switched to vegetable cultivation, but that is also hampered in the dry season due to lack of water.

Pollution has taken a serious turn as chemical wastes from small industries on or near the banks of Khowai and Sutang rivers are thrown into the rivers, he said.

Member Secretary of Nodi O Jolasoy Rokkha Andolon Ahsanul Haque Suja told this correspondent that lack of garbage management system in Habiganj town is the major cause of pollution in the Khowai and Sutang rivers.

Human wastes also find their way into the river through drains and canals, he added.

Problem-ridden Gournadi Upazila Health Complex in Barisal. Right, the out of order sole X-ray machine.

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Barisal

Gournadi Upazila Health Complex in the district has been running without operation services for the last 30 years, depriving the patients of surgery for lack of an anesthetist and equipment.

Besides, the problem-ridden health complex faced shortage of physicians, beds and medicines, lack of modern diagnostic facilities, ambulance service and absence of isolation ward.

The hospital was set up in 1987 with 32 beds and upgraded to a 50-bed one five years ago.

On average, 100 to 150 patients come to the hospital from far-flung areas of the district daily, but they do not get proper treatment and facilities. Critical patients are referred to Sher-e-Bangla Medical College Hospital (SBMCH) in Barisal city. Patients who need surgery have to go to another hospital or a private clinic due to lack of equipment in the complex.

The hospital has two operation theatres but they are not functioning, said Upazila Health and Family Planning Officer Dr SM Kabir Hasan, adding that there is no diathermy machine and the only X-ray machine is damaged. Even the doors and windows of the operation theatres have remained broken for many years, he added.

There is no anesthetist in the hospital, so we have not been able to perform surgery for 30 years, Dr Kabir added.

There are only 10 physicians out of 21 posts, and only two specialist doctors out of seven posts, he said, adding that the posts of surgical consultant, anesthetist, cardiologist, dermatologist, eye-specialist, ENT specialist and child specialist have been lying vacant for a long time. There is no orthopedic surgeon here, he said.

Patients coming to the hospital for surgical treatment are advised to go to SBMCH or to a clinic due to lack of surgical consultant in the hospital, said Kazal Das Gupta, a patient.

"We have sent a proposal to the health ministry to activate the operation theatres soon," Kabir said.

Coriander farming gets popular in Chapainawabganj

RABIUL HASAN with ANDREW EAGLE

Since the Neolithic age, peoples across Asia and Europe have enjoyed eating coriander. Recently the staple herb of South Asian cuisine has proved a particular blessing for Chapainawabganj farmers. With its low production cost, relatively trouble-free cultivation, reliable demand and good prices, coriander is increasingly a crop of choice.

"I grew coriander on twenty five bighas of land this year," says farmer Sohel Ali from Chanbhasa village in Charbagdanga union. "I started a few years ago with only three bighas, but have since leased more land for the crop since it is profitable."

"I leased four bighas of land for coriander," says another farmer, Torikul Islam, from Bagdanga village in Sundarup union. "I paid Tk 20,000 per bigha for the lease, but I expect to make a profit of up to Tk 70,000 when the coriander is sold.

Previously grown in family plots on a small-scale, commercial coriander production in the region has taken off over the last decade. Currently, over 5,000 farmers are involved in the enterprise, especially in Sadar and Shibganj upazilas. On the river shoals where coriander will grow well, the herb has improved the lot of many.

"There will be handsome profits this season," says Mohammad Alam, a farmer from Chanbhasa who grows coriander on six bighas. "A few days ago I sold a maund of coriander leaves for almost Tk 15,000. Now the rate is around Tk 7,000, which is still quite good."

Local farmers report that it costs around Tk 6,000 per bigha to grow coriander, which will produce up to 20 maunds of leaves. Better still, each bigha can be cultivated with coriander repeatedly, up to six times during the life of a typical lease.

Production rates region-wide average 5,000 maunds per day, meeting local demand and sold across the country, especially in Dhaka. A mango orchard in Pathan Para of the district town has become the place where coriander crops arrive from several shoals and other areas to be sold to wholesalers. A maund of coriander leaves there will sell for up to Tk 8,000.

"Coriander is grown widely between October and February," says the Deputy Director of Department of Agriculture Extension in Chapainawabganj, Monzurul Hoda. "Around 175 hectares, mostly on the sandbanks which are well-suited to coriander, were dedicated to the crop's production this year and it is increasing every day."
