

NEWS IN brief

UK FM in Iran to push for Briton's release

AFP, Tehran

Britain's foreign minister arrived in Iran yesterday to press for the release of British-Iranian woman Nazanin Zaghari-Ratcliffe who was arrested in 2016 in Tehran for her alleged links to mass protests in 2009. Boris Johnson's visit was the first by a top British diplomat since 2015 and he was also due to discuss that year's landmark nuclear accord between Iran and world powers, whose future has been thrown into doubt by US President Donald Trump.

Trump's approval rating at record low

INDEPENDENT.CO.UK

Donald Trump is the least popular US President in nearly 40 years, a new poll has shown. A Pew Research Centre poll found Trump's job approval rating has hit 32 per cent – lower than any US president dating back to Ronald Reagan.

US issues Pakistan travel advisory

PTI, Washington

The United States on Friday advised its citizens to defer all non-essential travel to Pakistan, saying that foreign and indigenous terrorist groups continue to pose a threat to them throughout the country. The warning comes in the wake of increasing terrorist violence, including sectarian attacks, in Pakistan.

Trump's senior ME adviser to resign

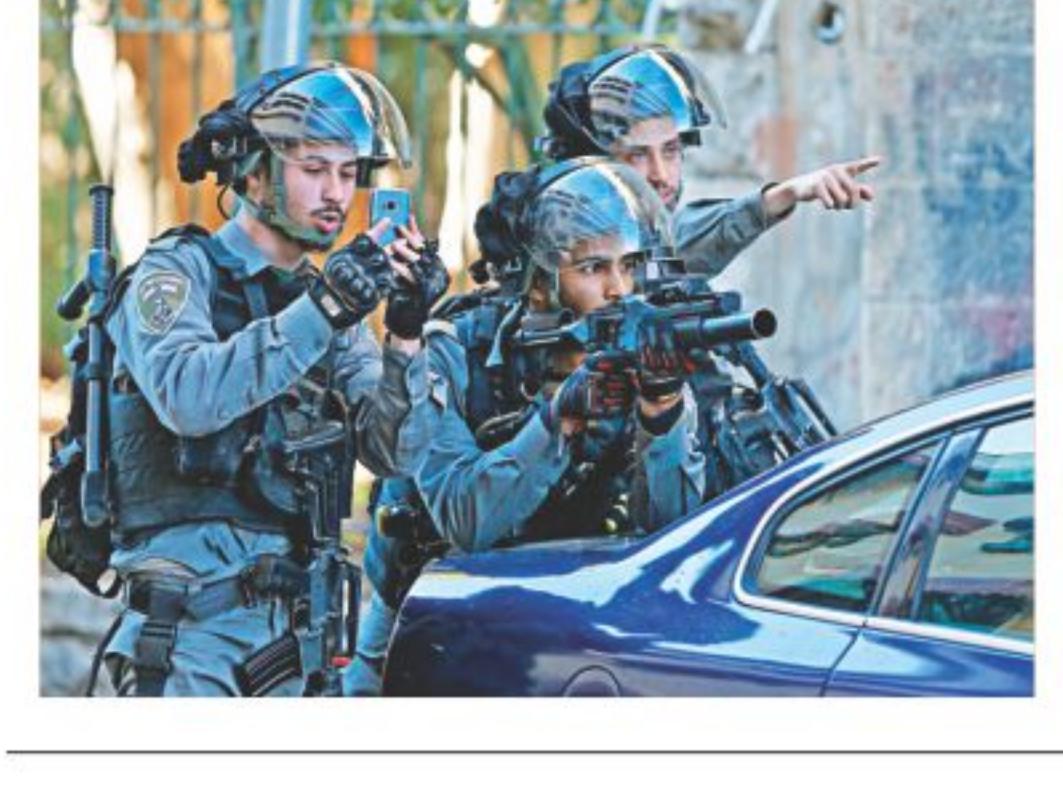

REUTERS, Washington

Donald Trump's deputy national security adviser and a key player in US diplomatic efforts in the Middle East, Dina Powell, plans to resign early next year, the White House said on Friday. Powell could be one of several administration officials to leave at the one-year mark of Trump's presidency. Speculation has centered on Secretary of State Rex Tillerson and top economic adviser Gary Cohn.

Women react as an Israeli mounted policeman disperses Palestinian protesters yesterday in East Jerusalem; Israeli police take aim at protesters in East Jerusalem; demonstrators in the West Bank city of Bethlehem react to tear gas fired by Israeli troops; and Israeli forces wrestle with a protester in a bid to foil demonstration in East Jerusalem.

PHOTO: AFP, REUTERS

Iraq now free of IS

PM Abadi declares end of three-year war against jihadists

AFP, Baghdad

of Hashid al-Shaabi paramilitary units.

Prime Minister Haider al-Abadi yesterday declared victory in a three-year war by Iraqi forces to expel the Islamic State jihadist group that at its height endangered Iraq's very existence.

"Our forces are in complete control of the Iraqi-Syrian border and I therefore announce the end of the war against Daesh (IS)," Abadi told a conference in Baghdad.

"Our enemy wanted to kill our civilisation, but we have won through our unity and our determination. We have triumphed in little time," he said.

IS seized vast areas north and west of Baghdad in a lightning offensive in 2014.

With Iraq's army and police retreating in disarray at the time, Ayatollah Ali Sistani, spiritual leader of the country's majority Shias, called for a general mobilisation, leading to the formation of Hashid al-Shaabi paramilitary units. Iraq's fightback was also launched with the backing of an air campaign waged by a US-led coalition, recapturing town after town from the clutches of the jihadists in fierce urban warfare.

Despite the victory announcements, experts have warned that IS retains the capacity as an insurgency group to carry out high-casualty bomb attacks through sleeper cells.

It also retains natural hideouts in the deep gorges of Wadi Hauran, Iraq's longest valley stretching from the Saudi border up to the Euphrates River and the frontiers with Syria and Jordan.

the border with Syria had been cleared.

The jihadists' defeat is a massive turnaround for an organisation that in 2014 ruled over seven million people in a territory as large as Italy encompassing large parts of Syria and nearly a third of Iraq.

On the Syrian side of the border, IS is under massive pressure too.

On Thursday, Russia's defence ministry said its mission in support of the Syrian regime to oust IS jihadists had been "accomplished" and the country was "completely liberated".

Despite the victory announcements, experts have warned that IS retains the capacity as an insurgency group to carry out high-casualty bomb attacks through sleeper cells.

"Israel is a state of occupation," Erdogan said in a speech in Istanbul, referring to Israel's continued occupation of the West Bank and settlement building.

Erdogan steps up attacks on 'occupier' Israel

AFP, Istanbul

Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan yesterday described Israel as a "state of occupation" which used "terror" against the Palestinians, as he stepped up his criticism of the US recognition of Jerusalem as its capital.

Erdogan has been bitterly opposed to the decision of US President Donald Trump to recognise Jerusalem and has called a summit of Islamic countries on December 13 in Istanbul.

"Israel is a state of occupation," Erdogan said in a speech in Istanbul, referring to Israel's continued occupation of the West Bank and settlement building.

A Palestinian man carries his wounded daughter as she waits to receive treatment following Israeli airstrikes in the northern Gaza Strip on Friday.

PHOTO: REUTERS

the proposal that Prince Mohammed communicated to Abbas, which purportedly came from Kushner, presents exactly that scenario.

As told to Abbas, the proposal included establishing a "Palestinian entity" in Gaza as well as the West Bank administrative areas A and B and 10 percent of area C, which contains Jewish settlements, a third Palestinian official said.

Jewish settlements in the West Bank would stay, there would be no right of return, and Israel would remain responsible for the borders, he said.

Trump's decision on Jerusalem is seen almost uniformly in Arab capitals as a sharp tilt towards Israel, which has only signed peace deals with Egypt and Jordan.

Saudi Arabia hosts first-ever concert by female singer

INDEPENDENT.CO.UK

Saudi Arabia has allowed a female singer to perform solo at a public concert for the first time in the country's history.

Lebanese singer Hiba Tawaji took to the stage this week at the King Fahd Cultural Centre in the capital Riyadh.

Thousands attended the historic, all-women event and danced to renditions of Celine Dion, as well as Arab classics.

Welcoming the singer onto the stage, the announcer called the event a "proud moment" for the country.

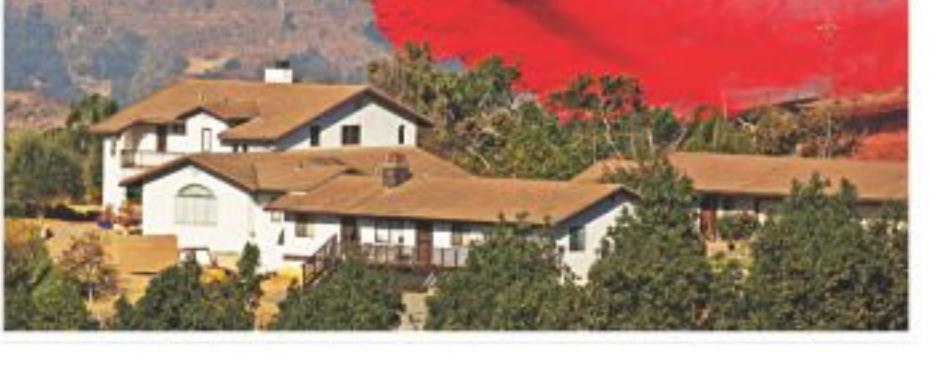

"All women should express their appreciation for a fact that a woman for the first time is performing at a concert in Saudi Arabia," they said, according to NBC.

Tawaji reiterated the sentiment between songs, saying: "This is my first time

Burned homes are seen at the Monserate Country Club after a wildfire swept through their community in Bonsall, California. Inset, A DC-10 aircraft drops fire retardant. Unrelenting winds fanned towering flames in southern California, where hundreds of thousands of people have been forced to flee multiple devastating fires.

PHOTO: REUTERS

N Korea blames US 'nuke blackmail' for tensions

UN envoy ends rare visit to the pariah nation

AFP, Seoul

North Korea blamed US "nuclear blackmail" for soaring tensions over its weapons programme following rare meetings with a senior UN official, but agreed to regular communication with the organisation, state media said Saturday.

Jeffrey Feltman flew to Beijing Saturday after wrapping up a five-day visit to Pyongyang aimed at defusing the crisis, just a week after North Korea said it test-fired a new ballistic missile capable of reaching the United States.

His trip -- the first by a UN diplomat of his rank since 2010 -- saw him meet Foreign Minister Ri Yong-Ho and vice foreign minister Pak Myong-Kuk, and visit medical facilities supported by the UN, the North's state news agency KCNA said.

"At these meetings, our side said the US policy of hostility toward the DPRK (North Korea) and its nuclear blackmail are to blame for the current tense situation on the Korean peninsula," the report said.

It added that the North had agreed with the UN "to regularize communications through visits at various levels".

Feltman, the UN's under-secretary-general for political affairs, visited the country just after US and South Korea launched their biggest-ever joint air exercise.

Pyongyang reiterated its view that these manoeuvres were a provocation, accusing the drills of "revealing its intention to mount a surprise nuclear pre-emptive strike against the DPRK".

US President Donald Trump has engaged in months of tit-for-tat rhetoric with Kim, pejoratively dubbing him "Little Rocket Man" and a "sick puppy".

Kim has called the 71-year-old president a "dotard", meaning a weak or senile old man -- an insult that was renewed yesterday as the North condemned Trump for recognising Jerusalem as Israel's capital.

The election is seen as a chance to finally prove his mettle before he is named president of the party his mother Sonia has led for more than two decades.

The election is a serious challenge to Modi as his rivals ride a wave of discontent over the stuttering economy, adding that voter anger over the reforms and a desire for change could boost the flagging fortunes of the opposition Congress Party.

Voting wrapped up at 5:00 pm local time (1130 GMT) in the first stage of the election yesterday, with around 68 percent turnout reported, the Election Commission of India said after polls closed, revising its earlier figure of nearly 50 percent.

Saturday's turnout was lower than the 71.3 percent registered at the last state election in 2012.

The Congress campaign has been spearheaded by Rahul Gandhi -- the man likely to challenge Modi for premiership at the next general election in 2019.

The election is seen as a chance to finally prove his mettle before he is named president of the party his mother Sonia has led for more than two decades.

The election is a serious challenge to Modi as his rivals ride a wave of discontent over the stuttering economy, adding that voter anger over the reforms and a desire for change could boost the flagging fortunes of the opposition Congress Party.

Voting wrapped up at 5:00 pm local time (1130 GMT) in the first stage of the election yesterday, with around 68 percent turnout reported, the Election Commission of India said after polls closed, revising its earlier figure of nearly 50 percent.

Saturday's turnout was lower than the 71.3 percent registered at the last state election in 2012.

The election is seen as a chance to finally prove his mettle before he is named president of the party his mother Sonia has led for more than two decades.

The election is a serious challenge to Modi as his rivals ride a wave of discontent over the stuttering economy, adding that voter anger over the reforms and a desire for change could boost the flagging fortunes of the opposition Congress Party.

Voting wrapped up at 5:00 pm local time (1130 GMT) in the first stage of the election yesterday, with around 68 percent turnout reported, the Election Commission of India said after polls closed, revising its earlier figure of nearly 50 percent.

Saturday's turnout was lower than the 71.3 percent registered at the last state election in 2012.

The election is seen as a chance to finally prove his mettle before he is named president of the party his mother Sonia has led for more than two decades.

The election is a serious challenge to Modi as his rivals ride a wave of discontent over the stuttering economy, adding that voter anger over the reforms and a desire for change could boost the flagging fortunes of the opposition Congress Party.

Voting wrapped up at 5:00 pm local time (1130 GMT) in the first stage of the election yesterday, with around 68 percent turnout reported, the Election Commission of India said after polls closed, revising its earlier figure of nearly 50 percent.

Saturday's turnout was lower than the 71.3 percent registered at the last state election in 2012.

The election is seen as a chance to finally prove his mettle before he is named president of the party his mother Sonia has led for more than two decades.

The election is a serious challenge to Modi as his rivals ride a wave of discontent over the stuttering economy, adding that voter anger over the reforms and a desire for change could boost the flagging fortunes of the opposition Congress Party.

Voting wrapped up at 5:00 pm local time (1130 GMT) in the first stage of the election yesterday, with around 68 percent turnout reported, the Election Commission of India said after polls closed, revising its earlier figure of nearly 50 percent.

Saturday's turnout was lower than the 71.3 percent registered at the last state election in 2012.

The election is seen as a chance to finally prove his mettle before he is named president of the party his mother Sonia has led for more than two decades.

The election is a serious challenge to Modi as his rivals ride a wave of discontent over the stuttering economy, adding that voter anger over the reforms and a desire for change could boost the flagging fortunes of the opposition Congress Party.

Voting wrapped up at 5:00 pm local time (1130 GMT) in the first stage of the election yesterday, with around 68 percent turnout reported, the Election Commission of India said after polls closed, revising its earlier figure of nearly 50 percent.

Saturday's turnout was lower than the 71.3 percent registered at the last state election in 2012.

The election is seen as a chance to finally prove his mettle before he is named president of the party his mother Sonia has led for more than two decades.

The election is a serious challenge to Modi as his rivals ride a wave of discontent over the stuttering economy, adding that voter anger over the reforms and a desire for change could boost the flagging fortunes of the opposition Congress Party.

Voting wrapped up at 5:00 pm local time (1130 GMT) in the first stage of the election yesterday, with around 68 percent turnout reported, the Election Commission of India said after polls closed, revising its earlier figure of nearly 50 percent.

Saturday's turnout was lower than the 71.3 percent registered at the last state election in 2012.

The election is seen as a chance to finally prove his mettle before he is named president of the party his mother Sonia has led for more than two decades.

The election is a serious challenge to Modi as his rivals ride a wave of discontent over the stuttering economy, adding that voter anger over the reforms and a desire for change could boost the flagging fortunes of the opposition Congress Party.

Voting wrapped up at 5:00 pm local time (1130 GMT) in the first stage of the election yesterday, with around 68 percent turnout reported, the Election Commission of India said after polls closed, revising its earlier figure of nearly 50 percent.

Saturday's turnout was lower than the 71.3 percent registered at the last state election in 2012.

The election is seen as a chance to finally prove his mettle before he is named president of the party his mother Sonia has led for more than two decades.

The election is a serious challenge to Modi as his rivals ride a wave of discontent over the stuttering economy, adding that voter anger over the reforms and a desire for change could boost the flagging fortunes of the opposition Congress Party.

Voting wrapped up at 5:00 pm local time (1130 GMT) in the first stage of the election yesterday, with around 68 percent turnout reported, the Election Commission of India said after polls closed, revising its earlier figure of nearly 50 percent.

Saturday's turnout was lower than the 71.3 percent registered at the last state election in 2012.