Born to a family of famers, Badal Miah of Ghatail upazila under the district has cultivated all sorts of fruits throughout his life. But it was papaya farming that catapulted him to prominence.

The 45-year-old from Sagardighi in Ghatail is now a role model to the farmers in his locality.

Growing up in the area, some 100 km northwest of Dhaka, Badal left school at an early age to join his father in farming work. They made a living mainly off growing bananas in the hilly terrain of Ghatail with fertile soils and favourable weather conditions, along with pineapples, turmeric, ginger and arum on a limited scale.

"Banana cultivation is prolific but it requires at least a year for the plants to grow to fruit bearing size," recalls Badal.

It was a bold step that made him invest Tk 5 lakh from his savings to lease 20 acres of land from the local land owners early last year.

He planted the red lady hybrid variety of papaya seedlings in March. The trees grow to mid height at about six feet in three to four months and then begin to bear fruit, said Badal.

Last year, he sold papayas worth Tk 25 lakh from the orchards to commercial fruit juice processors, bringing in a profit of Tk 20 lakh.

The red lady hybrid variety is more sought after than the local variety as it has a distinctive cerise colour, is sweeter and more fragrant. Papaya is high in demand for its nutritious properties; it is rich in antioxidants and vitamins C and B. It is also a good source of fibre and minerals such as magnesium.

With the success of the previous year, he gained the confidence to lease an additional 16 acres of land, expanding his orchard to 36 acres altogether.

"I spent a total of Tk 20 lakh on leasing labour costs, seedlings, fertilisers and pesticides to nurture the orchards. I sold the produce to several food processing industries for Tk 50 lakh this year, churning a profit of Tk 30 lakh," said Badal.

"Badal Miah has become an inspiration to all the farmers in the area," said Khademul Mamun, a schoolteacher at Sagardighi.

"We have extended all sorts of support to Badal, including training and advice on nurturing the trees on such a large scale," said Mohammad Abdul Matin Biswas, agriculture officer in Ghatail.

"Papaya cultivation is easy and profitable as the fruit matures throughout the year," he added.

A witness to brutality of Pak occupation forces

MINTU DESHWARA, Moulvibazar

Even more than four decades after independence, no initiative has been taken to preserve an unseen bunker that stands in the district town as a witness to the cruelty of the Pakistani occupation forces and the sacrifices of the local people during the Liberation War.

The bunker, located in the Primary Teachers Training Institute (PTI) area in the town, is hidden from people's eyes due to lack of initiative of the local administration to make it a memorial of the Liberation War.

Local sources and freedom fighters said the PTI area was the brigade headquarters of the Pakistani occupation army in 1971. They dug a 30-foot-long, 25-foot-wide and 10-foot-deep bunker there for torturing local people and freedom fighters

Pakistani forces abducted the then District Council Chairman Azizur Rahman, also convener of the sub-divisional committee and general secretary of Awami League Moulvibazar unit, on March 26 in 1971 and tortured him in the bunker.

The Pakistani soldiers brought huge numbers of people to the bunker and torture them there, locals said.

On a visit to the area, this correspondent saw that the bunker is closed on three sides, with a staircase going to the interior.

Head of PTI AKM Saiful Hasan said they are taking care of the bunker.

Azizur Rahman said they will initiate a project to build terracotta statues to depict the torture that was carried out there by the Pakistani army.
