2017: No good year

 Chairperson Saki Rezwana.
 Although there are Bangladesh Labour Act and International Labour Organisation convention, these are poorly enforced when it comes to workers' safety, she said.
 Such condition is a big drawback for production and human resource development in the country, she added.
 OSHE suggested providing workers with safety gears, regular inspection of boilers, forming dedicated units for ensuring workplace safety, building designated hospitals for RMG workers and providing financial assistance to the victims.
 The foundation's Vice Chairperson Dr SM Morshed, Director Masum Ul Alam and injured workers were also present at the programme.

 demanding that the government should build residential quarters, a school, and a mosque in the area.
 The workers have to struggle to support their families with the daily expenditure and little income, said Abul Kalam Azad, chairman of the Union.
 He also demanded a monthly interim allowance of Tk 3,000 for the workers, a separate wage board for tannery workers, while a stop on random job termination of workers.
 Shaheen Ahmed, chairman of Bangladesh Tanners' Association, said they were dumping solid wastes in a temporary dumping station at the site.
 Unbearable odour from the open dumping site always grips the area which is harmful for the workers, he added.

 Moreover, the central effluent treatment plant (CETP) is yet to start in the Estate. As a result, the Dhaleshwari river is being polluted with the liquid waste of the factories.
 Sheikh Fazle Noor Taposh, lawmaker of Dhaka-10 constituency, who was present at the event, said construction of the CETP will complete within June 2018.
 The government is working to address the other issues as well, he added.
 Representatives of Bangladesh Small and Cottage Industries Corporation (BSCIC) and thousands of tannery workers were also present at the event.

Engage community in fight

 with financial assistance from Kendeda. Now in the second phase, it is aiming to work in char areas of Rangpur as well, which are as frequently hit by natural calamities like floods.
 Alongside addressing issues surrounding poverty and livelihood, an understanding of the role of girls and women in society, their empowerment and the way they are valued, is important to bring sustainable changes to the scenario, Dena observed.
 One of the interventions that CARE and Kendeda find effective in building that understanding is community talk shows. Families are invited to the dialogues.
 The talk shows bring forth examples of girls whose parents have made difficult choices, refraining from the usual practice of early marriage, and how they have eventually succeeded in life. The stories can then inspire others, bending the social norm gradually, Dena continued. Kendeda believes in supporting research and gaining knowledge going deeper into an issue and communicating that to broader platforms, while seeking a solution, said Dena.
 Laws and policies defining the legal marriage age will not help prevent child marriage or early marriage, she said, "there is a whole slew of other laws and policies around education, around access to health, reproductive health" that the government should pay heed to find a solution.

 As an initiator of change, Kendeda and its partner CARE encourage and train their facilitators working on the ground so they discuss social and sexual taboos with caution showing respect to the long-practised tradition, she said. "It's a process... It's about persistence. It's not about coming in and trying to blow up the village."
 A simple piece of information like that the gender of a child is decided by the male sperm can help transform society's attitude towards the mothers of girl children.
 Adolescent girls having this information can share it with the younger generations and the coming generations in the process of attaining sustainability, said Dena, based on her experience of the changes she had noticed in haor areas. She concluded by assuring that she would be working for the long haul towards ensuring a better environment for girls and women living in Bangladesh.
