Indonesia central bank warns over cryptocurrencies REUTERS, Jakarta

Indonesia's central bank has issued a fresh warning about trading in cryptocurrencies like bitcoin because of the risk of losses to the public and even a potential threat to the stability of the financial system.

Bank Indonesia (BI) has previously said that cryptocurrencies were not recognised as a legal medium of exchange, so that they could not be used as a means of payment in Indonesia.

"The ownership of virtual currencies is high risk and prone to speculation because there is no authority who takes responsibility, there is no official administrator and there is no underlying asset to be the basis for the price," BI spokesman Agusman said in a statement issued late on Friday.

He said that virtual currencies could also be used in money laundering and terrorism funding, and due to all these factors could have an impact on the stability of the financial system and causes losses for society.

Chinese bitcoin miners eye sites in energy-rich Canada

REUTERS, Montreal/Shanghai

China's Bitmain Technologies is eyeing bitcoin mining sites in Quebec, a company spokesman told Reuters, as expectations of a potential Chinese crackdown on cryptocurrency mining make the energy-rich Canadian province an attractive alternative.

China has grown into one of the world's biggest sources of cryptocurrency mining but there are signs Beijing is increasing scrutiny of the sector's players and may ask local authorities to regulate their power use. Bitmain Technologies, operator of some of the largest mining farms in the country, is among several companies looking to expand overseas.

Bitmain spokesman Nishant Sharma said in an e-mail on Friday that the company was looking at sites in Quebec and is in talks with regional power authorities in the province. It is also planning to expand in Switzerland.

Bitcoin mining consumes large quantities of energy because it uses computers to solve complex math puzzles to validate transactions in the cryptocurrency, which are written to the blockchain, or digital ledger. The first miner to solve the problem is rewarded in bitcoin and the transaction is added to the blockchain.

Local Government Engineering Departme

While Beijing has not issued any official edict on the bitcoin mines, two Chinese miners told Reuters that local authorities had grown more unwilling to allow expansion and had started to shut down some mines in late 2017, as China clamped down on cryptocurrencies.

Last September, Chinese authorities banned so-called initial coin offerings and ordered Beijing-based cryptocurrency exchanges to halt trading.

"We, and from what I understand many of our peers, are already making plans to go overseas," said Li Wei, chief executive of ZQMiner, a Wuhan-based company that sells bitcoin mining equipment and has mines in three Chinese provinces.

Globally, regulators are increasingly voicing concerns about cryptocurrencies, which are not backed by any central bank, because of their volatility and worries about risks to investors. China, which has strict capital controls, is also worried that cryptocurrencies could facilitate illegal fund flows and breed financial risks.

In Canada, Hydro Quebec described a potential sales pipeline of around 30 large cryptocurrency miners after a campaign by the public utility to attract data centres to the province triggered a flurry of interest from bitcoin miners in 2017.

BMW drives to new sales record but still lags Mercedes

AFP, Frankfurt Am Main

German high-end carmaker BMW said Friday it booked record sales for the seventh year in a row in 2017, but continued to trail rival Mercedes-Benz.

The Munich-based group said in a statement that sales of its core BMW-brand cars rose by 4.2 percent to almost 2.1 million last year.

Growth was primarily driven by the strong performance of its X-series SUVs and updated 5-series limousines, the statement said.

While sales in China grew by 15 percent, European sales edged forward by one percent and business in the Americas declined by two percent.

Despite the record performance, BMW was still unable to catch up with Mercedes, which held on to the pole position in the luxury segment with sales of 2.3 million units last year.

Nevertheless, sales chief Ian Robertson insisted that the BMW group as a whole was "the world's leading premium automotive company".

cover sheet.

GD-117

Taking into account sales of BMW's Mini and luxury Rolls-Royce units, the group sold some 2.46 million vehicles worldwide last year.

Sales of new cars in Russia grew by almost 12 percent in 2017, ending a four-year slump, an industry group said Thursday.

Car sales saw year-on-year growth of 11.9 percent, the Association of European Businesses said at a new conference in Moscow. Russians bought 1.59 million new cars last year, with the most popular brands Russian-made Lada and Korea's Hyundai, followed by France's Renault.

The growth came after car sales were down 11 percent in 2016 after plunging by 36 percent in 2015 as most Russians found their purchasing power was eroded and struggled to buy expensive cars.

The trend began in 2013 with a 5 percent drop in sales following a record year in 2012 and continued with 10 percent drop in sales in 2014. "The market has a long way to go (to) return its former strength, but a first and important step in the right direction has been made," Joerg Schreiber, chairman of the AEB Automobile Manufacturers'

Sales particularly picked up in December, with year-on-year growth of 14 percent for cars and light vehicles.

Schreiber predicted that the trend for growth would continue -- despite uncertainty over government measures such as a tax on imported cars -- telling AFP: "I would be surprised if that doesn't happen."

With more than 140 million residents, Russia had long been an extremely attractive market for global carmakers such as Renault, the majority shareholder of Russia's biggest carmaker Avtovaz, which produces the top-selling Ladas.

But the sector, which is highly sensitive to exchange rates, was hit hard by the economic crisis two years ago caused by falling oil prices and Western sanctions on Russia over its actions in Ukraine.

The Russian government last year continued to support its car industry with a programme that included discounts to farmers, small business owners and families with many children.
