FAIHAM EBNA SHARIF PHOTOGRAPHY EXHIBITION

Date: Friday, 19 January to Friday, 26 January

Venue: La Galerie, Alliance Francaise

With the success of the Opium Wars, the East India Company followed by other sterling companies, set up tea business in the colonies. Today, tea is the second most consumed beverage in the world, after water.

Mass migration of labour and social division were among the key factors to introduce an 'enclave economy' within the tea estates, which still exist in the post-colonial years. British management system, credit and auction facilities in the pre-and post-production period, estate rules along with its own rituals, and a quasi-trade union which best serves the interests of the owners — all are still present in the 162 tea gardens in Bangladesh, which employ approximately half a million permanent, contractual and seasonal labourers.

The ghost of the centuries-old feudal structure is still evident in these so-called estates as a form of master-slave relation. With Tk 85 a day (just over US$ 1) or less, the workers have little access to education, accommodation, healthcare, sanitation, workplace safety. Gender discrimination is also rampant. All such exploitation complements a theoretical framework that produces the cheapest labour in the global economy.

History of colonialism in Bangladesh chronicles an extensive account of plantation economies of cotton, indigo, rubber, sugar, tea, and other crops like tobacco. The exploitative and abusive nature of labour underpinning the whole practice and the futility of growing indigo and sugar pushed the British colonialists to establish tea production in the Indian subcontinent.

In this photography exhibition Faiham Ebna Sharif's camera bears witness to the lives and struggles of the workers in the plantations.

EMOTIONAL INTELLIGENCE FOR SUCCESS

Date: Saturday, January 20

Time: 4 PM - 7 PM

Venue: EMK Center, Midas Center Building (9th Floor) House #5, Road #6, Dhanmondi, Dhaka

Emotional Intelligence is the ability to identify our emotions, learn to manage them, understand the emotions and needs of others, and develop good interpersonal relationships with people. Developing your Emotional Intelligence can help you become more successful in personal, professional and academic life, as it can help to understand your strengths and weaknesses, identify the needs and desires of others, and develop strong interpersonal relationships with others at work and at schools.

To help you develop this important soft skill, Mind Mechanics is going to conduct its next workshop on Emotional Intelligence on 20 January.

Upon completion of the workshop you will get self-assessment result of how good you are at understanding your own emotions and those of others. Develop an action plan to improve in these areas in order to make yourself more employable and effective at workplace and at school.

Certificates (upon full attendance). Light refreshments will be provided.

Registration is must:

CORRIGENDUM

Volume #17, Issue #30 of Star Lifestyle, dated January 9, 2018 ran a Special Feature, Rena Effendi's Bangladeshi Weddings. The interview inadvertently missed to highlight the role of Zara Rahim, Communications Director at American Vogue; Zara was also not credited for a photograph that she had taken.

After the interview was taken, photographer Rena Effendi visited other weddings, the total being seven instead of five, stated in the article. We would also like to state that the other images accompanying the article are from the Star Lifestyle Archive, and social media.

The online version of this article has been updated to include the aforementioned information. We sincerely regret any inconvenience caused.
