Pakistani Taliban militants yesterday shot dead four paramilitary policemen in Pakistan's western city of Quetta, where last month seven security men were killed in a suicide attack, police and the Islamist group said.

The Frontier Corps were patrolling the residential neighbourhood of Langoabad on motorcycles when they were fired on by gunmen also riding bikes, said Naseebullah Khan, Senior Superintendent of Police for Quetta.

"The four men were shot in the head," Khan told Reuters, adding that handguns were used in the attack.

Tehrik-i-Taliban Pakistan (TTP) claimed responsibility for the attack. Quetta is the capital of Baluchistan province, rich in resources and at the heart of $58 billion China-Pakistan Economic Corridor (CPEC) stretching from the Arabian Sea to China's Xinjiang region.

The province, the poorest and least developed in Pakistan, has suffered nearly a decade of separatist violence against the government.

India's ties with China and not just Pakistan are likely to get even worse than they already are, according to the US's intelligence chief.

"We expect relations between India and China to remain tense and possibly to deteriorate further, despite the negotiated settlement to their three-month border standoff in August, elevating the risk of unintentional escalation," said Coats during a hearing on 'Worldwide Threat Assessment' of the US intelligence community on Tuesday.

The US intelligence chief was referring to the standoff between India and China in Doklam on the border. The confrontation ended last August after both countries agreed they will pulled out their troops from the face-off site.

The uneasy truce continues to be punctuated by aggressive rhetoric from China toward India, especially by its foreign ministry as well its state-controlled media.

What the US's intelligence chief is talking about is the possibility that this tense truce, because of its fraught nature, may escalate tensions even if India and China don't provoke.

As it is, China's doing plenty to provoke. In November, China stridently objected to defence minister Nirmala Sitharaman's visit to the border state of Arunachal Pradesh. Then, it said it "never acknowltroops intruded into territory in Arunachal Pradesh for about 200 meters. China claims Arunachal Pradesh is part of South Tibet.

The Chinese intrusion in Arunachal Pradesh reportedly took place around the time National Security Advisor Ajit Doval and his Chinese counterpart Yang Jiechi held the 20th round of border talks in New Delhi on December 22.

The Doklam standoff began on June 16 after People's Liberation Army's troops began building a road in an area claimed by Bhutan. Indian troops intervened to stop it, saying it posed a security risk to the 'Chicken Neck', the narrow corridor connecting India with its northeastern states.

The standoff ended on August 28 following an agreement under which China stopped the road building and India withdrew its troops.

Still, China and India remain divided on many fronts, including India's deep suspicions of China's growing military activities in and around the Indian
