Harvey Weinstein sued again!

It seems the Weinstein wheel won't stop rolling. There's new development in the Harvey Weinstein scandal that shook Hollywood last year. This time, both Weinstein and his company, aptly named the Weinstein Company, has been sued by the state of New York. The allegations state that due to multiple cases of sexual misconduct filed against Weinstein from over 70 women, especially from employees of the Weinstein Company, both the company and Weinstein himself have failed to protect their employees and thus, must compensate the victims for any physical and mental damage caused to them. The attorney representing the New York state has not yet mentioned any specific sum for the compensation. The allegation has also named Bob Weinstein, Harvey's brother and a co-founder of the Weinstein Company, as a cohort of this crime.
