Md Arfan Ali, president and managing director of Bank Asia, and Buddhika Samarasinghe, director for business engagement at Nathan Associate London Ltd, an authorised agent of the Department for International Development, exchange the signed documents of a deal at a hotel in Dhaka on Tuesday. The agreement aims to support the financial inclusion with capacity building of smallholders and the emergence of thriving communities under a project "Growing Together".

Basel tells big banks that simple might be better

REUTERS, London

GD-1137

Big investment banks should accept that simple may be better when it comes to new rules for them from trading risks, a top regulator said on Wednesday.

The Basel Committee, made up of regulators from the world's main financial centers, is finalizing a set of capital standards to cover the risks banks face if their trading tives turn sour.

But banks with big trading books have long complained that the proposals are too blunt and will force them to hold far more capital than warranted by their actual risks.

On Wednesday, Basel hit back, with its Secretary General William Coen saying the final version of the capital requirements to protect rules may need to emphasize ease of application over sensitivity to

"Will the Committee need to consider whether simpler and more robust approaches should be included in the revised market risk framework?" Coen said in a speech books in stocks, bonds and deriva- to the annual meeting of global derivatives industry body ISDA in Miami.

"We know that the estimated impact of the revised framework appears to be relatively manageable for most banks," Coen said.

"So while there may be sound conceptual reasons for pursuing a specific approach or making a particular revision to the market risk framework, it is in no one's interest to end up with a framework that cannot be adequately implemented."

Market risk makes up the smallest part of a bank's mandatory capital buffer, representing less than 5 percent of the total.

Coen said attempts to match capital requirements to the type of risk could also affect banks' risk management.

"Undue regulatory complexity can therefore impair the ability of the board and senior management of a bank to ensure that the bank has adequate capital to support its risks," Coen said.

Overly complex rules would also be costly for the vast majority of banks that apply Basel's rules across the world but do not have the deep pockets of the few big lenders, Coen said.

Finalizing the rules, which are due to come into effect in January 2022, has been made more difficult by the lack of quality data on market risks needed to carry out an impact assessment.

Boeing cruises past forecasts as margins, sales grow

Boeing Co's profit jumped by more than half in the first quarter, surging past Wall Street forecasts, and strong sales of commercial jets led it to raise its forecasts for cash flow and from about $15 billion, previously. earnings after a record 2017.

After fellow manufacturer Caterpillar Inc unnerved stock markets by warning of rising metals prices on Tuesday, the world's biggest Wednesday that margins had improved at the start of 2018.

Core earnings, which exclude some pension costs, jumped to $3.64 per share from $2.17 per share a year earlier, dwarfing a consensus forecast of $2.58 per share according to Thomson Reuters I/B/E/S. Shares jumped more than 2 percent in response.

"Well it's not every day that a mega cap normal circumstances we would expect a very positive share price response," Vertical Research Partners Robert Stallard wrote in a note.

Boeing sold a record 763 aircraft last year and has already announced a rise in commercial deliveries in the first three months of the year. It raised its full-year operating cash flow forecast to $15.0 billion-$15.5 billion The company also increased its 2018 core earnings per share forecast to $14.30-14.50 from its previous projection of $13.80-$14.00. Core operating margin rose to 10.7 perplanemaker said in its quarterly results on cent from 8.5 percent a year earlier while revenue rose 6.5 percent to $23.38 billion, beating expectations of $22.26 billion.

> The results follow those of heavy equipment maker Caterpillar, whose shares tumbled on Tuesday after the company cautioned it would not have the same pricing power to pass on increased costs of material such as steel.

US President Donald Trump's crackdown company beats consensus by 40 percent. In on steel and aluminium imports, with tariffs of 25 percent for some steel products and 10 percent for aluminium products, has constrained supplies in the domestic market, inflating costs of the metals.

Kazi Masihur Rahman, CEO of Mercantile Bank, and ATM Zakaria Swapan, CEO of iPay Systems Ltd, an online payment platform, attend a deal signing ceremony at the bank's head office in Dhaka. iPay customers will be able to pay for utility services through MYCash, a mobile banking service of the bank, for free.

Credit Suisse profit soars as overhaul pays off

AFP, Zurich

Swiss banking giant Credit Suisse on Wednesday posted a big jump in net profit for the first quarter, as a major overhaul under way since 2015 delivers firm results.

The bank, Switzerland's second biggest after UBS, began to refocus its activities on wealth management over merchant banking.

The revamp, launched after French-Ivorian businessman and former politician Tidjane Thiam took the reins as CEO in 2015, has also involved a "relentless focus on efficiency", Credit Suisse said in a statement. "We have reshaped Credit Suisse in less than three years," the statement said.

For the first three months of 2018, the bank announced a year-on-year jump in profits of 16 percent to 694 million Swiss francs ($706 million, 579 million euros).

"Quarterly costs (were) reduced to (their) lowest level" in five years, the statement said.

Eighty percent of the bank's core profitability is now generated by its wealth management and investment banking activities -- up 41 percent from 2015, it added. "We had planned 2018 to be a year of acceleration in our performance," Thiam said in the statement.

"With these first quarter results, we got off to a good start in our third and final year of restructuring, and we are looking ahead to the future with confidence in our new business model and in our execution capabilities," he added.

Investors welcomed the earnings report, as Credit Suisse's shares jumped 4.5 percent in early Wednesday trading on the Zurich stock exchange.

Oil hovers near $74

REUTERS, London

Oil eased on Wednesday, but held in sight of threeyear highs reached the previous day, as rising U.S. fuel inventories and production weighed on an otherwise bullish market.

Overall, the environment for oil is bullish. Supplier cutbacks, steady demand growth, geopolitical tensions and a favourable structure in the futures market have attracted record investment in oil this year.

A rise in U.S. government borrowing costs to their highest since 2013 this week has tempered some investor appetite for risk, but analysts said they believed Brent crude may have another attempt at marking new 2018 highs above $75 a barrel. Weekly data on Tuesday that showed a rise in U.S. crude inventories also subdued the oil price somewhat.

Brent crude oil futures were down 14 cents at $73.72 a barrel at 1128 GMT, some 2 percent below the November 2014 high of $75.47 reached on Tuesday.

U.S. West Texas Intermediate (WTI) futures were down 4 cents at $67.66 a barrel.

"There's a good chance we try again to break $75 again. We still have all the different soundbites on Iran and the May 12 deadline is coming up," Petromatrix strategist Olivier Jakob said, referring to an upcoming date by which the United States has said it will withdraw from a nuclear deal with Iran if the other signatories to the deal do not meet certain conditions.

The prospect of fresh sanctions on Tehran and disruption to the country's oil flows has helped push the oil price to its highest since late 2014 this month.

"Market sentiment is turning increasingly bullish towards the commodity," said Lukman Otunuga, research analyst at futures brokerage FXTM.
