Bogra's aloe vera pioneer

MOSTAFA SHABUI with ANDREW EAGLE

What was wrong with Md Zahidul Islam? That question was the talk of his village for a while, in 2010. The young farmer from Maria village in Bogra's Shajahanpur upazila had just planted his 33 decimals of land with ugly-looking spiky plants that nobody could recognise. The villagers wondered who would buy such a bizarre crop. What was he thinking?

"When I grew aloe vera initially," recalls Zahidul, now 32, "my neighbours laughed at me. They said I'd never sell it and for the first three years they were right! I was so disappointed. There wasn't anybody to buy the aloe so I used to give it away for free."

Native to the Arabian Peninsula, aloe vera is a succulent with medicinal qualities, especially renowned for skin care.

For Zahidul, the decision to grow the plant was years in the making. Since he completed his Secondary School Certificate he'd been desperate for work. "I searched like crazy for a job but couldn't find one," he recalls, "and I also wanted to do something different." Eventually his elder brother suggested aloe vera. Zahidul went to neighbouring Natore where aloe cultivation was already established, to buy the first plants.

MUNTAKIM SAAD and SHAHEEN MOLLAH

The large amount of money Rab seized from the flat of a businessman early on Wednesday was withdrawn from a bank to buy cotton for his textile mills, an employee of the businessman claimed yesterday.

"The money is legal and has been withdrawn from a bank on April 18 to buy cotton," the man, who claimed to be a close aide of the businessman, told The Daily Star.

This newspaper could not contact the bank to verify the claim as the bank was closed on the weekend.

The Rab claimed to have recovered the sum on Wednesday from the Eskaton flat of Mosharaf Hossain, managing director of Mosharaf Group and a Commercially

Air pollution leads to rise in crime

MAIL ONLINE

Air pollution is a major driver of crime in big cities.

That's the claim of researchers who looked at connections between crime and air quality in London.

Researchers found that high levels of air pollution increase the rate of minor offences such as shop lifting and pick-pocketing.

However, air pollution does not seem to have a significant impact on the most serious crimes - such as murder, assault causing severe bodily harm and rape.

Researchers say crime may increase when smog levels are high because toxic air can increase the levels of stress hormone cortisol in the body.

The research has implications for other major cities, such as Chicago and New York, which also
