

Tick off the bucket list

The term "bucket list" was coined by a Hollywood screenwriter who used it as the core idea behind writing the movie, The Bucket List. You've probably seen or heard about it. Fun fact: the first item in the man's bucket list was to have a screenplay produced into a major motion picture. Well, congratulations.

A bucket list contains things you want to do before you 'kick the bucket', as in, before you die. Our own little lists have grown as we have, with items gaining or losing their numerical position. Some have been edited, some struck through, and some have been checked for good.

It's always exciting to have a list of wishes/goals/dreams/aspirations to work towards. In the case of a bucket list, one has their entire life to tick all the boxes. It doesn't matter if the number one spot in your list is "be able to speak five languages" or "perform at a sold-out Wembley Stadium" – the satisfaction upon fulfilment is the same.

What's more satisfying? Ticking off an item you didn't know was on the list.

APP REVIEW

Beauty at your fingertips

MOHUA MOULI

Platform: iOS, Android

Do you know what beauty is? Have you ever wanted to experience all the beauty that the real world and our imagination have to offer?

Well, now you can with Walli.

Walli is the sweet little app that lets you explore thousands of attractive wallpapers, making your phone screen look more like a chill-wave album cover and help remind you less about Black Mirror.

This app has artworks by artists from around the world, who naively share their work in this app so it can be used as wallpapers on any stranger's phone for free. You will find everything starting from minimalistic illustrations of cats, umbrellas, chairs, to more vibrant artworks that will surely increase your reputation as the aesthetic person in your friend group.

If you opt for a more basic choice of high-resolution photographs, in order to look professional by not going overboard with your wallpaper, but you want your phone to stand out as well, you should download this app right away.

So if you want beauty at your fingertips, get this app now, because obviously that BDT 6000 back cover with molten diamond glitter and crystal bunny ears is not cutting it out for you anymore.
