CASE AGAINST KHALEDA UK MP Carlile to brief media in Delhi July 13

OUR CORRESPONDENT, New Delhi

British MP and lawyer Alex Carlile will visit New Delhi on July 13 and address the media on the cases and imprisonment of BNP Chairperson Khaleda Zia.

Carlile would address a press conference at the Foreign Correspondents Club at 1:00pm on that day explaining the court cases against Khaleda, Club President S Venkatanarayan said. Observers here note that the British member of the House of the Lords is seeking to mobilise public opinion on the issue of Khaleda's cases ahead of the next parliamentary elections in Bangladesh, slated for late December.

Some lawyers of Khaleda from Bangladesh are also expected to join the press conference.

The activities of the ruling Awami League and BNP in New Delhi in the run up to the national elections are being keenly watched by political Political and diplomatic sources in the Indian capital said the BNP was ver keen on Khaleda's release from jail and participation in the polls campaign.

A three-member BNP delegation ast month visited New Delhi and interacted with leading think-tanks here. The team explained the political situation and the upcoming elections in Bangladesh.

A 22-member AL delegation, led by its General Secretary Obaidul Quader, had visited New Delhi in April and met Prime Minister Narendra Modi. Prior to that, another AL team, led by former Bangladesh foreign minister Dipu Moni, had come here to attend the plenary session of the India's main opposition party Congress and met its top leaders Sonia Gandhi, Rahul Gandhi and Manmohan Singh.

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's Political Adviser HT Imam will travel to New Delhi on July 5 on a three-day visit during which he will have a meeting with senior BJP leader Vinay Saharsabuddhe, also the president of Indian Council for Cultural Relations.

Imam is also expected to meet Indian External Affairs Minister Sushma Swaraj and National Security Adviser Ajit Dobhal before having interactions with the senior fellows of think-tank Observer Research Foundation on July 7.

Secretary M Shafiul Alam said the government high ups were considering the civil service quota reforms.

"It is under active consideration of the high level of the government. It did not come down to us yet," he told reporters at a time when students demanding the reforms were being attacked allegedly by Bangladesh Chhatra League activists in Dhaka, Jahangirnagar, and Rajshahi universi-

Shafiul said there were some "complexities" in the process and that any decision regarding the issue "would take time".

"You are analysing the issue so easily; things are not so easy. There are some complexities. A decision would come after analysis. We will take the next step in light of that," Shafiul said.

However, Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina in parliament on June 26 said a committee, led by the cabinet secretary, was working on the matter and she reiterated her stance on the cancellation of quota system in civil service recruitments.

"The system has been there for a long time. I've already said there'll be no quota system. This can't be reformed overnight. The committee has been constituted to find a way to scrap the existing system," UNB quoted Hasina as saying.

Hasina had suggested continuing the "freedom fighters' quota".

In February, students of different public universities and jobseekers, under the banner of "Bangladesh Sadharan Chhatra Adhikar Sangrakkhan Parishad", waged a movement demanding reforms in the quota for civil service.

Hasina in parliament on April 11 spoke about abolishing all types of quotas in public jobs.

But as no gazette notification was issued in this regard, the protesters started an indefinite boycott of classes and examinations in all universities and colleges on May 14.

On May 21, quota reform leaders postponed their boycott of exams about to hold a press conference to brief journalists on their next course of action at Dhaka University, they were attacked allegedly by Bangladesh Chhatra League men. Seven quota reforms protesters were injured.

The following day, Chhatra League men reportedly launched an attack on the protesters in Rajshahi University. Four protesters in Dhaka came under attack at Shahbagh.

Yesterday, the quota protesters were once again attacked at the Central Shaheed Minar and in Rajshahi and Jahangirnagar universities.

At present, 56 percent of government jobs are reserved for candidates under various quotas. Of the 56 percent, 30 percent are kept for freedom fighters' children and grandchildren, 10 percent for women, 10 percent for people of underdeveloped districts, five percent for members of indigenous communities and one percent for the physically challenged.

there, they went to the Kutupalong camp, talked to the refugees, and visited a counselling centre for abused Rohingya women and a field hospital.

The Rohingyas eagerly waited for the high-profile delegation. The UN chief walked through the camps, exchanged greetings with them and shook hands. A group of refugees, however, demonstrated at the Kutupalong camp. They demanded cancellation of the "secret agreement between Myanmar and the UN", saying their rights and demands were denied in the deal.

"We do not accept the agreement. It's a conspiracy, it's a game. Our rights were not included in the agreement," said one refugee, who came from Jamtoli camp area. The demonstrators held placards reading: "We want safe return to Myanmar" and "We want citizenship." They were dispersed before arrival of the delegates. After touring the camps for some four hours, Guterres said, "It is unacceptable that these people that have suffered so much in Myanmar now have to live in the difficult circumstances that these camps inevitably represent." Talking to the press, he said, "When I see the young boys and girls, I remember my own granddaughters and imagine what it would be like to see my granddaughters living in these conditions." Over 700,000 Rohingyas have taken shelter in Cox's Bazar in the wake of a brutal military crackdown in Myanmar's Rakhine State, joining over 300,000 others who fled previous waves of violence since 1980s.

"It is systematic violation of human rights. Rohingya people are the most discriminated people in the world. They need recognition... most basic rights of citizens by the government of Myanmar," Guterres said at a press conference in Cox's Bazar, beginning at 3:00pm.

He said it is probably one of the most tragic stories in the world. The UN secretary-general became emotional as his voice sometimes choked when he was speaking.

Back to Dhaka, Guterres called for unity of the international community and their persistent commitment to put pressure strongly on Myanmar for creating the right condition for safe and dignified return of Rohingyas to their own homes.

"It is the moment for the international community to be united very strongly to ask Myanmar to end the crisis and recognise the needs including addressing the citizenship issue," he said at a pre-departure joint press briefing with WB President Jim Yong Kim at Radisson Hotel in the evening.

Guterres said they want both "accountability and political solution" to the crisis so that the Rohingyas return to the place of their origin or the place they chose and have access to all the rights to have a normal life.

To make that happen, he said "very persistent commitment" of the international community is required.

Guterres was scheduled to leave Dhaka early today ending his two-day visit to Bangladesh. The World Bank president left at midnight wrapping up his three-day visit.

On the question of accountability, Guterres said the UN Security Council fact finding missions visited Bangladesh and Myanmar and there will be new report very soon. He also referred to the International Criminal Court as Bangladesh already responded to its request.

On a query, he said division in the Security Council over such issue is not a new feature but regarding the Rohingya crisis, they are united over asking Myanmar to create the right condition for safe and dignified return of the Rohingya people.

Citing example of UNSC division means massive investment -- not only on previous occasions on various issues including Syria, he said, "I have no doubt that the Security Council is united in requesting Myanmar to create conditions for return of Rohingyas."

In reply to a question whether there was any deal with Myanmar ignoring the citizenship and freedom of movement issues, the UN secretary-general said there was no such agreement.

"There is no agreement between the UN and Myanmar that these people should not be called Rohingyas. For the UN they are called Rohingyas, for Myanmar they are called Bengali Muslims."

Again, replying to a query about alleged compromise in a "secret deal between the UN and Myanmar", the secretary-general said there was no question of compromising with the Myanmar on the issue of the rights of the Rohingya people. "There was a disagreement between the UN and Myanmar on the designation of this community. We designate them as Rohingyas and Myanmar wants to designate them as Bengali Muslims. But we think this is a first step towards a solution," he added. "The concern comes from the fact that the name Rohingya is not written in the text. As the name Bengali Muslims is also not written in text. So if we have to make an agreement with the government of Myanmar to start paving the way for the rights to be recognised of these people, you see that is inevitable, we couldn't use our designation, they couldn't use their designation. "But that doesn't mean that these are not the Rohingya people for us. So I believe this MoU is the first step, on the way of progressive recognition of the huge mistake obviously to destroy the first step." Myanmar in November last year signed a bilateral deal with Bangladesh on the return of the Rohingyas, but rights of these people so it would be a repatriation has not begun yet. It also signed a tripartite memorandum of understanding (MoU) with the UN Refugee Agency and UNDP early last month. However, the UN says the situation in Rakhine is not yet conducive to safe and sustainable return of the Rohingyas.

On the MoU, Guterres had said in Cox's Bazar that it was the first step in the way of progressive recognition and the rights of the people. "It is a long road. Road starts with the first step and this is a type of concession. Let's test the sincerity of the concession. Let's move on." Myanmar is responsible for what has happened in Rakhine, and the

MoU is the first step to force the government of Myanmar to recognise the rights of Rohingya and pave way for a potential future return, he added. The core demand of Rohingyas for citizenship and freedom of movement still seems elusive as Myanmar has not initiated amendment of the 1982 citizenship law that denies them citi-Guterres said it is not acceptable if Myanmar says it has no responsibility for the Rohingyas. The Rohingyas should be considered citizens of Myanmar.

"Every stateless citizen has a right to get citizenship. We know this is a very difficult issue for the government of Myanmar. We know that Myanmar government probably will not accept everything and that's why we are very keen on a number of concrete rights for the people." He added, "We need to push. We will be pushing. Every citizen should have a country." The UN insists on repatriation of the Rohingyas to Myanmar but only when they can live there with dignity, said Guterres. Creating conditions in Rakhine each other and end hate speech, he said. "This is our objective. We will do everything to make it possible. In between we need to do more for these > people and for the local people." GRATITUDE TO BANGLADESH The UN chief conveyed deep gratitude to Bangladesh for opening the border, while many other countries are closing the door.

ation to make communities respect

However, he said the solidarity expressed by the international community has not been translated into sufficient support to the Rohingya people sheltered in Bangladesh.

Recalling his visit to Cox's Bazar and Rakhine when he was the UN high commissioner for the refugees in 2008, he said now the situation is very grave as tens of thousands of people crossed over into Bangladesh. "We need to express international solidarity. It is not the responsibility of Bangladesh but the whole world. We need to do everything possible to support Bangladesh." The huge refugee population has put immense pressure on environment, existing infrastructure, and social services that had already been constrained During the monsoon that causes landslides in the hilly region of Cox's Bazar, some 200,000 Rohingya live in risky situation, while the funding for the Rohingyas has been inadequate. "The safety of the Rohingya refugees during this monsoon season is priority one. As many as 200,000 need to be relocated. We cannot allow the monsoons to wash away the hopes of the Rohingya refugees I met today in Bangladesh," Guterres said in his tweet in the afternoon. He told the media in Cox's Bazar that out of 1 billion dollar appealed in March to meet the needs till December this year, only 26 percent fund has been raised.

"That means we have no capacity to provide basic needs...my appeal to the international community is to step up and to substantially increase the financial support to protect and assist the Rohingya refugees."

Planet's birth

It is visible as a bright light just to the right of the black part at the centre of the image. The planet is roughly three billion kilometres from the central star, about the same as the distance between Uranus and the Sun.

The dark region that can be seen in the middle of the photo is because of a coronagraph - a mask that blocks the blinding light of the central star and allows astronomers to detect its much fainter disc and planetary companion. It is that mask that allows the planet to be formed, since otherwise the bright light of the star would overwhelm any light coming from the planet itself.

"These discs around young stars are the birthplaces of planets, but so far only a handful of observations have detected hints of baby planets in them," said Miriam Keppler, who led the team who found the still-forming planet. "The problem is that until now, most of these planet candidates could just have been features in the disc." As the first planet for scientists to get a confirmed view of, PDS 70b will serve as a useful test of theories about how planets come to exist. They will be able to explore the atmospheric and physical properties and compare them with how planets are expected to form.

"Keppler's results give us a new window onto the complex and poorlyunderstood early stages of planetary evolution," said André Müller, leader of the second team to investigate the young planet. "We needed to observe a planet in a young star's disc to really understand the processes behind planet formation."
