

Weird gigs on the internet

FAISAL BIN IQBAL

The internet is a mysterious place. At times, it offers you cute pictures of cats and dogs and at other times, it makes you question the sanity of some people. Sane or not, many people have come up with creative new service ideas which they offer online through different third party sites. These services may seem bizarre and weird in nature, but the fact that people actually buy these services shows how appreciated they are in our modern times.

Dream interpretation: Many psychiatrists and fortune tellers now have online gigs where they offer their counselling sessions at a minimal price. They provide you services like dream interpretation to fortune telling using tarot cards. Most of these service providers are self-proclaimed experts in their respective fields and the loads of good reviews from their clients validate their claims.

Impersonating famous people: These are some talented people who will impersonate famous personalities like Samuel L. Jackson, Matthew McConaughey, and so on. They sell their services to people for marketing and promotional purposes. These services are quite common in Upwork and Fiverr as the base price starts from USD 5-10 and increases depending on the length of the script they have to read out.

Jungle dance: These performances have gained popularity over the years. It's mainly an individual or a small group of people wearing body paint and Tarzan-like outfits who chant a particular message sent in by the client. At times, they dance with the message painted on their bodies or written on cardboard paper. It's fun to watch them perform though. Such services start at around USD 5 and go higher depending on the length of the video to be made.
