The foremost challenge to the desired operation of bus service is that there are over 200 companies that own the buses and compete against each other to grab same passengers, leading to hazard and indiscipline on roads, he said.

He said buses operated by the same company but leased out to drivers do the same.

Farid Ahmed Bhuiyan, chairman of Bangladesh Road Transport Corporation, said, "There is no alternative to bus route rationalisation -- and the unhealthy competition [for passengers] has to be stopped -- as well as reducing the staggering number of cars."

The corporation operates around 500 government-owned buses to augment public transport service in addition to what is provided by private operators, he said.

Sheikh Hasina's

Hasina spent much of her childhood in the village where she was born. In 1954, when Bangabandhu was elected legislator, the family relocated to Dhaka.

In her student life, Hasina actively took part in the six-point movement of 1966 and the student movement of 1969, which saw the abdication of General Ayub Khan.

In 1968, she married nuclear scientist Dr Wazed Miah.

During the Liberation War, Hasina and her family were interned at a house in Dhaka.

On July 27, 1971, her first child Sajeeb Wazed Joy was born. Her second child Saima Wazed Hossain was born on December 9, 1972.

In 1996, 21 years past the assassination of Bangabandhu, Hasina led Awami League to power and became the prime minister. In 2008, she led the alliance to another victory with 90 percent of the seats in parliament. In 2014, Hasina once again became prime minister.

Sheikh Hasina has been honoured with various honorary degrees, accolades and awards in recognition of her leadership excellence. Her most recent role in providing humanitarian support to Rohingyas drew accolade from global leaders, institutions and personalities.

He urged the country's youth to uphold the spirit of the Liberation War.

"If Bangladesh derails from its principles and the spirit of the Liberation War, then it will no longer remain 'Bangladesh' as we know it," he said.

On building leadership, he said youths have to be empathetic towards the underprivileged, and consider their necessities.

They have to be able to make sacrifices and demonstrate humanity, he said, adding that Bangabandhu could liberate the country because he could sacrifice his personal interests.

Dr Rizvi advised the young participants not to accept any "inherited wisdom" but challenge it all the time, and only believe in things which are validated by evidence.

He also lauded the organisers for ensuring presence of diverse youth groups at the event.

According to the case statement, Rigan was picked up by the abovementioned police personnel from Dhalghat Camp area of Patiya on September 17 while returning from his in-laws' house.

"Rigan informed them he was a lawyer but the law enforcers assaulted him. They took away his money and demanded Tk 1 lakh bribe for his release," he said.

"After getting pressure from Chattogram Bar Association's leaders, the policemen took Rigan's signature on a blank paper while pointing a gun at his head and released him," said advocate Selim, quoting him.

The signatories of the statement are envoys of EU, Italy, Spain, Sweden, France, Germany, the Netherlands, Denmark, the UK, Norway and Switzerland.

Before its passage, the Editors' Council stood firmly against the law, while national and international organisations including Amnesty International, Human Rights Watch, Transparency International Bangladesh, and Ain o Salish Kendra have strongly condemned it after it was passed in parliament on September 19.
