

The fleeting keeper of timeless pieces

Freud's psychoanalysis on collecting and collectors is nothing short of bizarre. But that is Sigmund!

The lexicon could not reveal a term for the sari collector; none for the jewellery aficionado either. That however, does not stop thousands going overboard from buying closetful of saris, and jewellery far out numbering the saris/dresses they have in possession.

People, women and men, buy saris and jewellery, not always to wear or embellish, but simply to tuck in a corner of the wardrobe. That is not collecting in a strict sense.

So, what is collecting...and what is this insane thought of collecting saris and jewellery?

Allow us to explain...
