Untold tales of unsung heroes

Indigenous freedom fighters still await recognition

ANWAR ALI, Rajshahi

Uttam Kumar Sarder was a tenth-grader when he picked up a weapon to fight for the country's freedom from the Pakistani army in 1971.

But his contributions to the war remain unrecognised as he is a member of Rajshahi's Adivasi Orai community at Abolokpur village, some 15 kilometres away from the city, indigenous leaders say.

"Utter neglect towards the tribal people is a reason for not recognising them as freedom fighters," said Rabinranath Soren, president of Jatiya Adivasi Parishad (JAP).

He said no survey was conducted, but he knows at least 50 indigenous people from Rajshahi and Rangpur divisions who are still awaiting recognition even after applying for it in the last 10 years.

At his home in Rajshahi's Paba upazila, Uttam has been rearing some cattle and farming on one bigha of ancestral land. His wife Alon Bakla, also a member of the Orai community, contributes to the family by working as a day labourer on the fields, he told The Daily Star.

Among his three children, his only son goes to Rajshahi University; one of his daughters is married while another is a sixth-grader.

"My participation in the war was selfless. I was motivated by freedom. And I never felt the necessity of getting a certificate."

But now, his son would be greatly benefitted by the recognition in finding a job. "Not for me, I need the recognition to help my children survive."

With the Indian gazette, where he is listed as a freedom fighter, Uttam applied for the certificate three times already. "I don't know what happens to my applications, or where it goes," said a bewildered Uttam.

One Orai freedom fighter from his village migrated to India in the 80s, while another Santal of a neighbouring village died a few years ago before he could get the recognition.

Abdul Momin, a group commander during the war, said Uttam was the youngest in his group of nine freedom fighters. "He was our inspiration during those times."

Uttam took training at Panighata Higher Training Camp in Siliguri of Indian. He fought several battles under sub-sector 4 of sector

7 during the war.

In one battle at Horma village in Chapainawabanj Sadar, he survived a shower of bomb shells near his bunker.

He survived another attack the night before Eid-ul-Azha during the war at the village. He was with 300 other freedom fighters; they were assigned to drive the Pakistani forces out of the local union office, where they had set up a camp.

The Liberation War monument in a remote village of Sunamganj left in a dire situation due a lack of maintenance and care.

An uncared for monument of the Liberation War

DWOHA CHOWDHURY, back from Sunamganj

In a remote village called Moheshkhola under Dharmapasha upazila in Sunamganj, a monument was built in 2013 to commemorate the Liberation War and freedom fighters of the first sub-sector under Sector-5.

The monument is situated next to a small river, also called Moheshkhola, where freedom fighters confronted Pakistani Army during the war and many lives were lost.

Inspired by the patriotic song "Shob Kota Janala Khule Dao Ma", architect Rajon Das designed the monument, 27 feet in height, where windows are the highlight. The monument was built by the Zila Parishad of Sunamganj at a cost of Tk 1.21 crore.

Unfortunately, within five years of its opening, the structure is in dire need of maintenance.

During a recent visit to the monument, this correspondent found that the monument premises are being used to keep construction materials for a nearby site, and mold is growing on the walls, darkening the structure. People were also seen loitering about.

Architect Rajon Das said, "The design of the monument is now being exhibited in Paris, France as part of 60 architectural heritage sites of Bangladesh. The exhibition, 'Bengal Stream: The Vibrant Architecture Scene of Bangladesh' by Bengal Institute for Architecture, has already travelled to Switzerland (in association of Swiss Architecture Museum) and will be coming to Bangladesh by next July."

"I have repeatedly requested the authorities for proper maintenance of the structure but it appears they're not concerned. I believe the monument must be maintained regularly before it is too late," he said.

Md Billal Hossain, the union chairman of Bangshikunda Uttar, said the monument has become a hangout spot for the youths of Moheshkhola bazar as there is no other public place in the locality.

"Though this monument should attract visitors from near and far, communication to this part of the country is challenging to say the least. Regular maintenance is also not possible without support from the Zila Parishad," he said.

colours by forming an alliance with BNP and Jamaat, who were involved in the "politics of killing".

Also speaking there, Justice Shamsuddin Choudhury Manik said: "The mask of Dr Kamal [Hossain] has been opened. He is really a pro-Pakistani man. Now people have a question to him how many crores of dollars he has taken to bring the Jamaat and other war criminals into the election field."

Bangladesh Online Activist Forum organised the programme at the Jatiya Press Club, in presence of victims bearing injuries of the petrol bomb attacks during political violence in 2014 and 2015.

In another programme in the city, Golam Rahman said, "Dr Kamal couldn't tolerate the question. As a politician, he could have maintained silence; but can't slam the journalists."

Air Cdre (Retd) Ishfaq Ilahi Choudhury commented that Dr Kamal will be "thrown out as garbage" after the election.
