USAID to support agricultural productivity

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Aiming to boost agricultural productivity of small farmers, USAID Agricultural Value Chains (AVC) project is providing support to train local service providers on agricultural machineries.

Although number of farmers using mechanised agricultural tools is increasing day by day, many are still struggling as they lack the knowledge and services required for repair and maintenance of the machines, leading to low productivity and income, a statement of the USAID said.

To address this problem, USAID's Agricultural Value Chains (AVC) Project provided support to local private sector industry experts: Metal Agro, and ACI Machinery, to train a network of Local Service Providers (LSPs) on agro machinery maintenance and repair, the release added.

The LSPs turned into entrepreneurs and own agro machineries, render maintenance and repair services to farmers on a fee-for-service basis, and also enhance the farmers' knowledge in this regard.

Under the project, 429 LSPs have been trained, who are helping farmers improve machine management and attain cost efficiencies.

Ahead of the election, Border Guard Bangladesh personnel have begun patrolling streets of the city. A contingent of the paramilitary force took position in front of BNP candidate for Dhaka-8 Mirza Abbas' Shahjahn timer residence around 12:45pm yesterday.

The local unit of Awami League claims that BNP and its allies are using Rohingyas in their campaigns.

"Rohingyas have been seen in the processions of BNP candidates," said Jahangir Kabir Chowdhury, the party's Ukhiya Upazila unit general secretary.

He said they (Rohingyas) may cause problems during the election, a claim turned down by BNP leaders.

Sarwar Jahan Chowdhury, BNP's Ukhiya Upazila unit chief, claimed that the ruling party is using the Rohingyas in many ways. "They may even try to mobilise the Rohingyas on voting day [today] and use them against their rivals," he said.

THE SMELL OF MONEY, AND BLOOD

Rohingyas are using the election season to earn some extra cash. But their involvement in the election process may lead to unrest, locals fear.

Advocate Ayachur Rahman, general secretary of Save Cox's Bazar Movement, said a number of Rohingyas, who came to Bangladesh during 1978-79, had managed to enlist themselves as voters.

"Those Rohingyas and the new arrivals might get involved in the election and sabotage the polling booths," he said.

"Rohingyas have been ordered not to leave the camps from 7pm of December 29 to 8am of December 31," said Cox's Bazar Returning Officer and Deputy Commissioner Md Kamal Hossain.

During this period, NGO workers and volunteers will also be barred from entering or leaving the camps in cars. However, they will be allowed to use cars to deliver food and emergency medical help.

Many locals say they feel the EC embargo should have been longer.

"This short-time ban has given Rohingyas the opportunity to take part in polls campaigns. We fear that they can cause large-scale violence," said Gafur, also general secretary of Rohingya Repatriation Committee.

Meanwhile, law enforcement and security agencies are on alert.

Cox's Bazar police chief AKM Iqbal Hossain has said the law enforcement agencies have been cautiously taking position around Rohingya camps in Ukhiya and Teknaf while police, Rapid Action Battalion, Border Guard Bangladesh, and Ansar members are patrolling the sites.

"It [the EC order] is to make sure that nobody can use the Rohingyas for political mileage or to cause disorder," said Deputy Commissioner Kamal.
