A boy looks through a book in a pile where no item is up for sale. Anyone in need of anything kept here, including clothes and books, can just pick it up and take it. This concept, called "Manabatar Dewal" (Wall of Humanity), is currently trending throughout Bangladesh. This one was set up by Asad, a resident of Lalbagh in Old Dhaka. The man collects the clothes and books from around the neighbourhood and puts them up for the poor. The photos were taken yesterday.

Eco-friendly solution for coastal areas

Prof Ainun Nishat urges govt to built levees that prevent salinity and keep water bodies inside polders alive

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Noted water resources and climate change specialist Prof Ainun Nishat yesterday urged the government to build embankments in the country's coastal areas in such a way they prevent salinity intrusion and keep the water bodies inside the polders alive.

Previously, Bangladesh Water Development Board (BWDB) used to build the embankments to prevent salinity only, resulting in deaths to many water bodies inside the polders, after being disconnected from the regular water flow, said the professor emeritus of Brac University.

A polder is a piece of land in a low-lying area that has been reclaimed from a water body by building embankments and drainage canals.

"Now it's time to restore those connections. Work on the design perimeters of the embankments... and consult with local people to implement those," he added.

He made the remarks while speaking at a workshop on "Bangladesh's coastal zone", organised by BWDB in association with Institute of Water Modelling (IWM), Danish Hydraulic Institute (DHI) and Netherlands-based Deltares at CIRDAP in Dhaka.

The programme was organised for inception of a 30-month study on "Long Term Monitoring, Research and Analysis of Bangladesh Coastal Zone", expected to end in May 2021.

Funded by the World Bank, the study under a project of BWDB, will be conducted by DHI and Deltares in association with IWM, University of Colorado and Columbia University to create a framework for sustainable polder design in Bangladesh.

At the workshop, Prof Nishat said a rise in sea levels and salinity intrusion will affect Bangladesh's lower-middle part within the next 100 years.

"The polder system should be made environment-friendly. At the same time, the sluice-gates should run properly... We hope that our coastal belt will be free of salinity and inundation in future," he said.

BWDB Director General Mahfuzur Rahman said the government will spend about USD 2 billion per year in the coming days for water resources management. Conducting more study in this sector is necessary to use the money properly, he stressed.

Water Resources Ministry Secretary Kabir Bin Anwar, BWDB Additional DG Khondaker Khalequzzaman and Chief Engineer Habibur Rahman also spoke.

Political movement will be dealt with politically: Quader

UNB, Munshiganj

Road, Transport and Bridges Minister Obaidul Quader yesterday said nobody believes that those who faced defeat both in their movement and in election have anything new to do.

The minister came up with the remark while talking to reporters before starting his journey for Tungipara from Shimuliaghat in Munshiganj around 9:30am.

"They failed to wage any movement for 10 minutes in the last 10 years. What will they do now? If they wage any movement politically, we'll respond to it politically," he said.

Responding to a question about Oikyafront's programme demanding cancellation of the election, Quader said it is an opposition party's programme; it is their personal matter. "They can announce any programme in a legal way centring the election. There's nothing to say. Action will be taken, if they carry out violence in the name of movement."

Delta Plan 2100 must involve public approval: Speakers

Special conference by Bapa and BEN begins tomorrow

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Humanity is facing a major threat and Bangladesh would be one of the most affected countries due to climate change, Prof Abdullah Abu Sayeed said yesterday.

"Think what would happen if a huge part of the country goes under water," Prof Sayeed wondered at a press conference at the Jatiya Press Club in Dhaka.

Announcement about a special conference on "Delta Plan 2100 and Sustainable Development in Bangladesh" was made at the press conference. The special conference is scheduled to start from tomorrow at Krishibid Institution Bangladesh auditorium in Farmgate.

The two-day conference, jointly organised by Bangladesh Poribesh Andolon (Bapa) and Bangladesh Environment Network (BEN), will inform people about the long-term strategy and identify the strengths and weaknesses of Delta Plan 2100.

Experts from home and abroad, with representatives of areas covered under the plan, will take part in the event. At the press conference, speakers stressed the need for collective national discussion on the projects.

"The government undertook some major projects, including the ones on climate change," Prof Sayeed, also president of BAPA, said. Some good work may have been done but most of the time they were not "fruitful" due to some individuals pursuing their self-interest, he added.

"It is a must for the government to share such development project planning with the public to maintain transparency," he recommended.

The Bapa president said civil society should urge the government for dialogues over the issues, adding that the purpose of the special conference is to encourage similar constructive discussion among all stakeholders of Delta Plan 2100.

Development often comes at the expense of the poor. In riverine Bangladesh, boats were once the only means of transportation in many areas, and people used to earn a livelihood by ferrying passengers. Today, with phenomenal development in communication infrastructure including bridges, the term "ferryman" is almost as dead as the profession itself. A group of small local boats anchored in a beautiful pattern -- because the boatmen do not have much work these days -- were seen at Kamrangirchar in Dhaka yesterday.

ENDING CHILD MARRIAGE

All stakeholders must work together, say speakers

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Child marriage is one of the worst forms of violence against women, which leads to forced sex, early pregnancy and often domestic violence -- ruining a child's chances to fully reach her potential. Law is not enough, and the government or non-government organisations alone cannot address the multi-dimensional issues contributing to this widely prevailing social menace. An action plan should be sketched out on the basis of knowledge and experience of individuals and organisations working in the field. All stakeholders, including development partners, must work together to eliminate child marriage, speakers said at a roundtable at The Daily Star Centre in Dhaka yesterday.

Share-Net Bangladesh, a knowledge-based platform focusing on sexual and reproductive health and rights (SRHR), organised the event aiming to strengthen collaboration between stakeholders.

Early marriage is often seen as a way to step into the next phase in life when girls are not studying, not receiving any training and are not employed. From this realisation, the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) began working with different ministries to provide girls with all the opportunities and ensure that they have access to the services available.

At present, 52 percent of girls in Bangladesh are married off before they turn 18, according to Share-Net.

Referring to a baseline survey, the platform says 50 percent of married adolescents became pregnant before they turned 18 and 22 percent gave birth by age 15.

Teenage pregnancy in the country is 31 percent, second highest in the world and the highest in South Asia. Contribution of adolescent fertility to total fertility is 24.8 percent, according to the survey.

DEATH OF ARITRY Court asks for probe report by Feb 11

COURT CORRESPONDENT

A Dhaka court yesterday directed detectives to submit by February 11 the probe report on the case filed over "provoking suicide" of ninth-grader Aritry Adhikary of Viharunnisa Noon School and College in December last year.

Metropolitan Magistrate Sadiqur Rahman Chowdhury passed the order after police's Detective Branch (DB) Inspector Kamrul Hassan Talukder, investigation officer of the case, failed to submit the probe report yesterday.

Earlier in the day, Hasna Hena, now on bail in the case till submission of the probe report, was present at the court.

Hasna Hena, 51, was arrested by DB on December 5. She was sent to jail the next day by a Dhaka court. Later she was released on bail on December 9 last year.

Aritry's father Dilip Adhikary filed the case with Paltan Police Station on December 4 against three teachers including Hasna Hena, a day after she died by suicide, after reportedly being subject to humiliation by teachers.

The two others -- Principal Nazneen Ferdous and morning shift in-charge Zinat Akhtar -- are yet to secure bail from any court, sources said.

Aritry's death stirred protests by students and guardians. Students boycotted classes and demonstrated, but and later withdrew their programmes upon assurance from the government that the persons responsible for the incidents will be brought to justice.

The ISPR Directorate requested all to remain aware in this regard.
