Nilsagar abuzz with migratory birds again

The winter birds back to the sanctuary after two decades as congenial atmosphere returns due to special steps

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Nilphamari

After nearly two decades, flocks of migratory birds from Siberia started coming again to vast water body Nilsagar, a sanctuary for birds, at Dhobadanga village of Sadar upazila this winter.

Thanks to the authorities concerned for launching a useful project aiming to create a congenial atmosphere, by providing shelter and food through planting thousands of local variety trees, for the guest birds.

Caretaker of the sanctuary Nirmal Chakraborty said around 10,000 guest birds arrived in Nilsagar this winter after the district administration took a project titled 'Program for Creating Natural Forest' to ensure food and shelter to the guest birds a couple of years ago.

Migratory birds start coming to Nilsagar in early November and stay till March-April in a bid to protect themselves from the terrible cold of the northern countries, he said.

As the fluttering and chirping of thousands of winter guest birds thrilled the visitors, authority concerned declared the 54 acres water body as birds' sanctuary in 1999, Nirmal informed.

Local resident Shamsul Islam, a journalist, said, "The area saw a decline on arrival of migratory birds when the government declared the water body as birds' sanctuary nearly 20 years ago. It happened just because several thousand century-old trees were felled for the up-gradation of the vast water body, which caused loss of shelter and food for the birds."

There were numerous trees like banyan, blackberry, mango, jackfruit and many birds lived on their fruits and used to take shelter on the trees, but due to unwise felling of trees many birds disappeared, he added.

"Ignoring experts' advice, the authorities concerned planted tree saplings of foreign varieties like shishu, mahogany, eucalyptus and others, which neither grow with bushy branches nor produce any fruit for bird's feeding," Shamsul said.

Ornithologists warned that many guest birds do not even sit or rest on foreign variety trees, but their warning fell on deaf ears and the area saw a sharp decline in the number of guest birds.

According to historian Mohammad Nasiruddin the previous name of Nilsagar was Binna Dighi. The then Hindu king Raja Virat dug the water body and named it after his beloved daughter Binnaboti.

Nilphamari Additional Deputy Commissioner (Revenue) Shahinur Alam said arrival of guest birds increased tremendously in recent time after the district administration took a project titled 'Program for Creating Natural Forest.'

Teachers of 210 nationalised schools without salary for 2yrs

840 teachers badly suffering due to deprivation amid official complications

SAIKAT DEWAN, Khagrachhari

While Sajek, a newly designated tourist spot in Rangamati's Baghaichhari upazila, is booming with tourism activities day by day, education of hundreds of school kids in the area is facing various problems and uncertainty.

Moreover, there are no pure drinking water facilities and proper health care service for the local inhabitants.

The government included 22 non-government primary schools in Baghaichhari upazila under nationalisation scheme about two years ago, but the area hardly saw any improvement in education system as teachers of those schools are yet to receive any government facilities, including regularisation of the their jobs under the ministry concerned.

A total of 210 primary schools, earlier managed by the hill district councils, in three hill districts were included in the nationalisation scheme in February 20, 2017.

Of the 210 schools, 81 are in Rangamati, 80 in Bandarban and 59 in Khagrachhari.

During a visit to Hamachang Furongni Government Primary School at Tripurapara beside Baghaihat-Machhalong-Sajek road, about 40 kilometres from Baghaichhari upazila headquarters, this correspondent found four teachers of the school living a sub-human life as they are not getting their salaries since the nationalisation of the school about two years ago.

There are 64 students in the school, which has four tin-shed classrooms.

Although the school has toilet facilities for its young learners, there is no arrangement for pure drinking water.

Kalpo Ranjan Tripura, president of the school managing committee, said all the 210 schools were established under supervision of United Nations Development Program and Chittagong Hill Tracts Development Facility (UNDP-CHTDF) in 2010.

Prior to stopping their activities in the hill districts, UNDP-CHTDF paid the teachers salary for nearly five years.

After that Rangamati Hill District Council paid the teachers' allowances for another two years, till the nationalisation of the schools, Kalpo Ranjan said, adding that, the teachers are not getting their salaries since the declaration of nationalisation in 2017.

According to the government's notification, the primary education offices concerned will first create posts for required number of teachers and then hire them under the government scheme, which is still awaited.

Headmaster of Furongni Government Primary School Jagadish Tripura said in reality many teachers often have to work as day labourers to maintain their families.

Acting Upazila Primary Education Officer in Baghaichhari Sona Mitra Chakma said as the teachers are not getting their salaries they cannot put pressure on them to attend their institutions on humanitarian ground.
