

After page 14

What to get? It's a shorter list of what you cannot get. No car parts. No model cars. No Lego. As a result, my son and I were thoroughly tried of our patience. But there are pets. An entire section caters to all kinds of pet animals including what appears to be funkily dressed squirrels having had a few puffs of quality dope. And in most cases, you are allowed to pet, hug and cry over the dogs and cats and ferrets. And snakes. Just don't plan to buy them. If you must, you will need a permission from the Ministry of Fisheries and Livestock.

Things that got our manly men
attention:

Scented soaps: Look like fruits and candy. We suggest you do not eat them because no matter the aroma, they still taste like soap.

Brand new antiques: Rusty signs you want to put up in your mancave? They look 50 years old but were most likely printed out 50 minutes ago.

Shoes: Branded and not so branded.
Eventually they are all the same. Difference is you pay three times the price for the brand name instead of the locally made versions. Real antiques are often rusty and sharp. Manly men often cut themselves and feel the need to show the world their bloody manliness. But these new antiques are much safer. In many cases these are printed rust that is completely tetanus free.

Coconut icecream: Quite possibly the best and strangest ice cream you can ever have and not be worried about eating chemicals because there are none. As manly men, you may be disappointed at not having to crack and peel the coconut with your bare hands. Mostly because your bare hands will be occupied holding bags and children's backpack.

Kinky showpieces as gifts for other manly men friends back home

Dried fruits: Manly men prefer these as they don't go bad. I think. So you can leave them lying around

Ehsanur Raza Ronny is confused dad, all round car guy, model car builder and cartoonist. Currently Editor of Shift (automobiles), Bytes (technology) and Next Step (career) for the Daily Star

BY SALZAR RAHMAN

CONTINUED.

Photos: Ehsanul Raza Ronny