

The lady's side of solo travel

Venturing to other countries is no longer a challenge, time-wise. It sometimes boggles the mind as to how it took over months for ships to travel from the Indian subcontinent to the British Isles, but that is how it was!

With 2019 now in full swing, the rise of female travellers choosing to head out on trips on their own is a most wonderful development amidst all the mundane motions of life. This not only reflects an international change, but also allows for women to connect better without boundaries. While facts and figures are easy to come by on travelling hours and money spent, the stories are the ones that live on. Talking to five different travellers, from the young and bold to the seasoned solo journey experts, we get a glimpse of a world that has to be seen on your own to be believed!

CONTINUED ON PAGE 24

