Arson victims still living in the open

37 landless families lived in Bostabor village of Naogaon, but UNO said only 13 families would get housing

ANWAR ALI, from Naogaon

Four days into the arson attack, landless families in Bostabor village in Naogaon's Dhamoirhat upazila are still reeling from the shock of losing everything, but the authorities are yet to arrange a proper shelter for them.

During a visit to the village on Wednesday, the affected people, most from indigenous Pahan community, said their children and the elderly are now staying in a nearby shed built for a poultry farm.

Many of the community members have been spending the nights under trees, while others out in the open.

Only visible step taken by the authorities is a police camp set up at the scene to avert further attack on the arson victims.

Although Jatiya Adivasi Parishad leaders identified 37 landless families, 23 from indigenous Pahan community, to have been affected in the arson attack, Dhamoirhat Upzila Nirbahi Officer Ganapati Roy said they were arranging housing facilities for only 13 families.

"We will arrange housing for some of them at Ashrayan project. Others have their own land and housing," the UNO said.

The UNO also said according to land records, the disputed land of 1.04 acres was given as a permanent settlement to Sirajul Siddiki in 1969 and Sirajul handed it over to Akter Hossain and his son Hossain Mosharraf in 1977.

Mosharraf, a loyalist of local Awami League lawmaker, paid necessary taxes regularly and he had been in possession of the land until the landless people occupied it a year ago, he said.

Rebutting the UNO's claim, Noren Chandra Pahan, organising secretary of Jatiya Adivasi Parishad, said the disputed land is recorded as khas land in the RS (Revisional Survey) record of 1972 and no one filed any litigation claiming the piece of land.

"If the land was given as permanent settlement, the record must show it," he said.

Meanwhile, the police arrested Mosharraf after he was made the prime accused in a case filed over the arson attack.

According to the case, Mosharraf and some 50 other local AL activists set fire to the houses and launched an attack on around 150 members of 37 landless families while they were asleep. At least three members of the landless families were injured in the attack.

Among the injured, Dulali Pahan and Nazma Begum were released from Dhamoirhat Upazila Health Complex, while Shanti Pahan is still undergoing treatment.

Dr Abu Isha M Arafat Imam, resident medical officer at the health complex, said Shanti suffered physical assault and her condition was improving.

Lying in a bed at the health complex with injuries to her right arm and leg, Shanti said, "Here I have a bed to lie down at night. But after I'm released from here, where will I go?"

Since the death of her husband, Ghutu Pahan, three years ago, Shanti was living with her in-laws at neighbouring Ghasipukur village. Six months ago, she took along her four-year-old son and started to live in a hut on the disputed land.

At the time of arson attack, she was sleeping with her son. "I came out of my hut only to find that several houses were already on fire and people were being chased out."

Trying to escape, she jumped into a pond with her son, but the attackers got a hold of her, Shanti said, adding, "They beat me up with bamboo sticks and were threatening me by saying that they would set me on fire."

She started running again and at one stage, while passing through a paddy field, her son fell off her arms.

Shanti then had no other choice but to stop and save her son from the attackers. "I did not let any of their strikes hit or touch my son. He wouldn't have survived that," said the mother.

While she was undergoing treatment at the health complex, one of her aunts had been looking after her son, Shanti said.

At Bostabor village, a burning smell still filled the air.

Binu Bala Pahan, mother of three boys, said she was living on the land for a year with her six-year-old son.

"For the last three months, the attackers had been threatening of dire consequences for living on the land," she said. "We told them to provide proof from the court that it was not a khas land. But they torched our houses by pouring petrol."

Unless the members of Border Guard Bangladesh (BGB) rushed to the spot in time, their lives would have been at risk, she said.

Havildar Sha Jahan of Bostabor BGB border outpost noticed the first sign of arson attack around 1:10am on Monday and hurried to the spot with Nayek Subedar Abu Sayeed and 12 BGB personnel.

"I saw the fire high in the sky and heard crackling sounds of burning bamboos," he said, adding that "We then cordoned off the place and saved the landless people."

It appeared to be a premeditated attack, Sha Jahan said.

All the MPs are from Awami League

The Election Commission (EC) on Wednesday night directed three lawmakers in Tangail to leave their constituencies by yesterday (Thursday) to create atmosphere for a fair election.

A tower of violations

"But on February 23, 2005, they submitted a photocopy of the building's design showing 22 floors. But there was no document to support it," he said.

After yesterday's fire that killed at least 19 people, the Rajuk formed a committee to investigate how the four additional floors were built and whether the building had fire safety equipment, he said.

The original design had an emergency staircase, but the Rajuk chief could not confirm if the building's emergency exit was built as per the design.

Built on an eight-katha plot, each of its floor has 6,000 square feet space for commercial purposes, according to its website.

But there was no fire-protected exits in the building that houses a restaurant, a coffee shop, a branch of state-run Pubali Bank, a buying house, a freight-forwarding company, and many other firms, said Major Shakil Newaz, director (operations) of fire service.

"We have written to all the building owners on this street, including this one, at least five to six times, asking them to take precautions for fire safety. But no one ever complied," he told reporters after the fire was brought under control around 4:45pm.

The Daily Star could not contact the building owner, SMHI Faruque, for his comment.

Many more buildings along Kamal Ataturk Avenue do not have fire protection, including Banani Super Market, Hotel Sweet Dream and Hadi Tower, according to fire service.

Under the building code, buildings with over 500 occupants must have at least two staircases, and fire exits need to have doors that block out fire and smoke.

Also, the walls must be thick enough to withstand several hours of fire, to protect the people escaping through the fire exit.

Ali Ahmed, the immediate past director general of fire service, said the FR Tower lacked fire safety equipment and its staircases were not well protected against fire.

"As people were frightened and smoke darkened the whole area, especially the staircase, people jumped off the building to save their lives," he said.

People can die from 30 seconds of smoke inhalation, he added.

Witnesses said people broke the buildings glass and screamed for help. A number of people jumped from the building to save their lives from the blaze while many others were seen sliding down from various floors using ropes and cables hanging from and around the building.
