The Eagles of Hokkaido

For birders, a trip to Hokkaido during winter revolves around the Red-crowned Crane. However, there are several other spectacular birds that one can see in Hokkaido in winter.

Among them are two eagles, Steller's Sea Eagle and the White-tailed Eagle. During a recent trip to this northernmost island of Japan, I had the opportunity to observe both.

Steller's Sea Eagle is one of the world's largest birds of prey. It can weigh up to ten kilograms which is half a kilogram heavier than the famed Harpy Eagle of South America. Growing to a meter in length, its wingspan can reach over two meters. Compared to its length, it has a relatively short, diamond-shaped white tail. Mostly dark brown, this eagle has splashes of white on its body, notably a long patch on each shoulder.

Its most remarkable feature is its large and bulb-shaped orange beak. One would not want to be on its receiving end. The bird catches fish from the sea and hunts smaller birds including all manners of water fowl and gulls.

Steller's Sea Eagles live most of the year in northeastern Asia, particularly Kamchatka Peninsula, where they breed. They migrate to northern Japan during the winter and feed off the fish of surrounding waters.

The White-tailed Eagle, on the other hand, makes Hokkaido its year-round home. It, too, is a large eagle with a weight of up to seven kilograms, length of slightly less than a meter, and wingspan similar to that of the Steller's Sea Eagle. The adults are dirty grey in colour with a pronounced white band seen on its tail while in flight, much like our Pallas's Fish Eagles. The younger eagles are coloured more rust and brown.

For both these eagles, females are larger and heavier than males. This difference allows males and females to target different sets of prey, thus reducing the area they must cover to feed themselves.

My first sighting of these eagles was at the fishermen's town Furen near the frozen Lake Furen on the northeastern corner of Hokkaido. The town borders the Pacific Ocean where the fishermen catch fish. White-tailed Eagles were perched on top of large, leafless trees, with an occasional Steller's Sea Eagle in the mix.

Later, near the town of Nemuro, I saw both types of eagles on a snow field where they dived for fish put out for them. About two dozen eagles were already on the snow. Some had claimed their piece of fish and spread their wings like an umbrella around it to ward off other birds – a behaviour known as mantling. More eagles flew in and landed among them. A band of crows surrounded them looking for a morsel or two and when one got too close it was chased away. When a fight broke out, it was usually between eagles of the same species. The fish was soon gone and so were the eagles, except for a couple of lonely looking sea eagles which sat despondent in the snow.

That same afternoon, we saw the nest of a White-tailed Eagle on a tall tree on the mountainside. Like other eagle nests I have seen, it was a jumble of branches and twigs. The female White-tailed Eagle lays between one and three eggs per year and parents take turn incubating them for forty days before they hatch.

Tolerance absent in political culture

Says Fakhrul

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Thakurgoan

BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday said one-party ruling system is prevailing in Bangladesh in the guise of democracy.

Politics has gone in the hand of one party; that is why people have lost interest in politics, he said.

In addition to that, people have become indifferent to elections after the last national polls, the BNP senior leader said.

Fakhrul came up with the remarks while talking to journalists at his hometown residence in Thakurgoan.

"We are an ill-fated nation. We liberated the country in 1971 with the dream of building a healthy political culture," he said.

"What is healthy politics? The major factor is tolerance," he added.

The BNP secretary general continued: "There might be difference of opinions. My opinion may differ to others' but there should be tolerance."

"Respect should be shown to different opinions," he added. Unfortunately, tolerance, which is the key component of a sound political culture, is completely absent in Bangladesh, Fakhrul observed.

RAJSHAHI AIRPORT

Chaos over security check

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Rajshahi

Security personnel at Shah Makhdum Airport "forced" a top official of the Detective Branch of Rajshahi Metropolitan Police (RMP) to go through a second security check on Wednesday.

Enraged by the incident, a constable of RMP's Special Branch, posted at the airport, assaulted a security guard.

Constable Jalal was later transferred over the incident.

Around 4pm on the day, Abdullah Al Mamun, deputy commissioner of RMP's Detective Branch, went to the airport to catch a Dhaka-bound flight. He went through preliminary scrutiny, collected his boarding pass and got on the plane, without going through another check.

Noticing that, security personnel stopped the flight.

Mamun then returned to the lobby and completed the scrutiny.

"Earlier, when I started walking towards the plane, a security person approached me. I gave him my identity and asked whether I need to go through any more scrutiny," Mamun told The Daily Star yesterday.

"He stayed mum. I thought I didn't need any," he added.

Mamun said most security personnel knew him as he often inspected the airport's security measures and remained there for protocol duty. They used to allow him to pass without any inspection.

"After I boarded the plane, I heard there was a commotion at the airport. I got off and went there. I saw a police member arguing with a security guard, and at one stage he [policeman] started a fight," he added.

Mamun said he then went through scrutiny and reprimanded the police member for his behaviour.

Without elaborating, Setafur Rahman, airport manager, said an altercation ensued between the two, which was late settled.

Masud Rana, the security guard, claimed that he requested the police official to go through security scanning, but he (the official) did not.

Iftekayer Alam, an assistant commissioner of Special Branch, said Constable Jalal was transferred for his actions.

He claimed that the airport authorities have begun the second security check just a few days ago, and Mamun was unaware of it.

RU Prof Shafiul murder verdict on April 15

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Rajshahi

Rajshahi speedy trial tribunal has set April 15 for announcing the verdict of Prof AKM Shafiul Islam murder case. Prof Shafiul was a sociology teacher at Rajshahi University.

Judge Anup Kumar scheduled the verdict after holding argument in the case on Thursday, Entajul Haque, public prosecutor of the tribunal, said yesterday.

Unidentified assailants stabbed Prof Shafiul, 48, to death on November 15, 2014 when he was returning home in Rajshahi city's Choddopai area. Shafiul was known as a progressive teacher and a Lalon songs enthusiast.

Hours after the killing, Ansar Al Islam Bangladesh-2 claimed responsibility for the murder on social media and police arrested three militants over the claim. The victim's son Soumin Shahrid Javin also suspected radicals behind the murder.

RU registrar filed the murder case the following day, accusing unknown persons.

On November 30, 2015, Inspector Rezaus Sadik of police's Detective Branch submitted the charge sheet and ruled out any militant outfit's involvement in the murder.

He accused Anwar Hossain Ujjal, a former convener of Rajshahi district unit of Jatiyatabadi Jubo Dal, and ten others for the murder. Other accused are: Nasrin Akhter Reshma, an assistant section officer of RU; her husband and Jubo Dal activist Abdus Samad Pintu; former Katakhal municipal unit Jubo Dal organising secretary Ariful Islam Manik; Sirajul Islam Kalu; Mohammad Sabuj; Al Mamun; Mohammad Arif; Mohammad Sagor; Zinnat Ali, and Ibrahim Khalil alias "Tokai Babu".

According to the charge sheet, Sabuj, Sagor, Arif, Zinnat and Ibrahim hacked Prof Shafiul to death upon receiving instructions from Ujjal and Manik.

The charges were based only on the confessional statement of the accused Nasrin Akter Reshma who claimed Prof Shafiul was killed because "he misbehaved with her", said public prosecutor Entajul Haque. He said none among the 34 prosecution witnesses named the accused persons.

10 N'ganj high-rises at fire risk

Identifies fire dept

OUR CORRESPONDENT, N'ganj

Fire service officials yesterday identified 10 high-rises as risky in Narayanganj.

The officials also hung signboards outside the buildings, terming those risky.

"Around 100 high-rises in the city have only one staircase instead of two, no fire extinguishers and insufficient water supply. Some lack sufficient air circulation system. We are hanging signboards outside those buildings," said Abdullah Al Arefin, deputy director of Fire Service and Civil Defence in Narayanganj.

The drive will continue today as well, he said.

Owners of the risky buildings have been asked to take fire safety measures immediately. Otherwise, legal actions will be taken against them, he added.
