Away from the
CITY LIGHTS

The traffic around the city worries everyone a bit more than what should be normal. It exhausts you, plays havoc with your nerves, and sucks all the energy that you are left with. Might sound like the rant of a typical out-of-towner, but think about it a bit deeply. Is it not that what most of us feel after being stuck on the roads for hours to run an errand that under normal circumstances should take just minutes? To run from it all, I planned on taking a 'deshi' road trip with my spouse. Just to go out of the city and breathe in some fresh air and with it a little bit of sanity...