Culvert lies useless for yrs

Vehicles can't reach the bridge for want of approach road

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Khagrachhari

A culvert at West Golabari, three kilometres from Khagrachhari-Rangamati road in Khagrachhari town is lying virtually useless since its construction in 2012 as suitable approach roads have not been made for vehicular movement. Meanwhile, the structure has slightly subsided.

The culvert was made with fund from the Ministry of Relief and Disaster Management to facilitate communication between Khagrachhari Sadar to Khedapara, which is situated at the foot of Alutilla Hill, said Gyana Ranjan Tripura, chairman of Golabari Union Parishad.

"There was a plan to widen the earthen road on either side of the culvert but it was not done. The road, broken at places, remains unfit for vehicular movement," he said.

As per government circular, project implementation officer (PIO) of the upazila supervises the planning and construction of such culverts in rural areas.

"Fourteen families living in Khedachara Para use the rural road. But the culvert didn't come to any use for them as vehicles could not be run there even for a single day," said Asim Kumar Tripura, 35, a resident of West Golabari.

Kazi Masudur Rahman, PIO of Khagrachhari Sadar upazila, said, "After receiving information, I visited the culvert at West Golabari. The culvert looks like others of the kind, which were funded by the Ministry of Relief and Disaster Management. But I did not find any documents at the office regarding the culvert."

Initiative will be taken to renovate the culvert and make the road usable for vehicles, he added.

Man who cheated death

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Jhalakathi

Amzad Hossain is one of the 13 who survived after their fishing boat capsized on Sunday, they day after Cyclone Bulbul made landfall.

A crew of 24 men were headed for their homes in Char Fashion upazila of Bhola after selling their catch at Chandpur fish market.

Before setting sail around 6 in the morning, they all asked the boat owner not to make them go out in the choppy seas. But he did not pay heed.

With two of them at the boat's controls, other 22 went to sleep in the berths inside the boat's hull. Soon enough, monotonous thumping and bumping of waves put them in deep sleep.

Amzad's ten years of experience at the sea came into play when he suddenly woke up with water all around and his boat turned upside down.

The 28-year-old youth remained calm and tried to open his berth's hatch that was now under water. But he failed to open the hatch.

Having to get into seawater to untangle fishing nets many times before, Amzad did not give up hope. This time he tried harder and he finally made it out of the berth by kicking the hatch open.

Swimming out of the hull, he found the boat barely floating amid huge waves and strong winds. He climbed up on its keel, now facing the sky, to locate its position. "I saw at least a hundred storms while fishing in the deep sea, where waves resemble mountains, but never had I met with such an accident," Amzad said.

Sensing that the boat was going to sink in no time, Amzad then jumped into the water and started to swim towards the shoreline. Before jumping into the strong waves, he took off all his clothes that might slow him down or even drown him.

It was around 1:00pm when Amzad swam ashore. He was told that he reached the bank of Tentulia river in Rajapur village of Bhola Sadar upazila.

After locals brought him clothes and some food, he told them that he had to rescue his fellow fishermen who might still be in the capsized boat. They helped him make phone calls to his relatives at his home village of Abdullahpur in Char Fashion.

His relatives along with several fishermen arrived in Rajapur within a few hours and by around 4:00pm, they sailed out in a rented fishing boat to rescue Amzad's comrades who perished in the same river near Bahadurpur village of Barishal's Mehendiganj upazila.

Their rescue mission, however, had to be aborted as the coast guard, police and officials from the local administration insisted that civilians would not be allowed to conduct rescue missions for safety reasons.

"The coast guard, police and officials from the local administration were at Chandpur ghat [on Sunday] too, but no one stopped us from making the voyage in the boat," Amzad said.

"We've got no choice. Our lives are tied to the hands of the boat owners and we always have to follow their wish. If the boat owner didn't force us to go to the sea, all the ten lives could've been saved," he lamented.

Rescue workers later found ten bodies of the crew inside the capsized fishing boat. Amzad and 12 others came out of the boat alive while one of them still remains missing.

Illegal felling of roadside trees causes concern

S DILIP ROY, Lalmonirhat

Illegal felling of roadside green trees continues, allegedly by the auction winner for 1200 trees prior to renovation of Patgram-Dahagram road at Dahagram union in Lalmonirhat's Patgram upazila, much to the grievance of nearby villagers.

Locals said around 15 thousand trees, including mahogany, akashmoni and different fruit trees, adorned both sides of the 18-kilometre road with greenery and provided shed to locals, pedestrians and tourists to Tin Bigha Corridor area.

Recently, forest department auctioned 742 out of 5,000 roadside trees under their jurisdiction and the zila parishad auctioned 458 out of another 5,000 trees under their supervision, as the Roads and Highways Department (RHD) is going to start renovation work of Patgram-Dahagram road, said officials concerned.

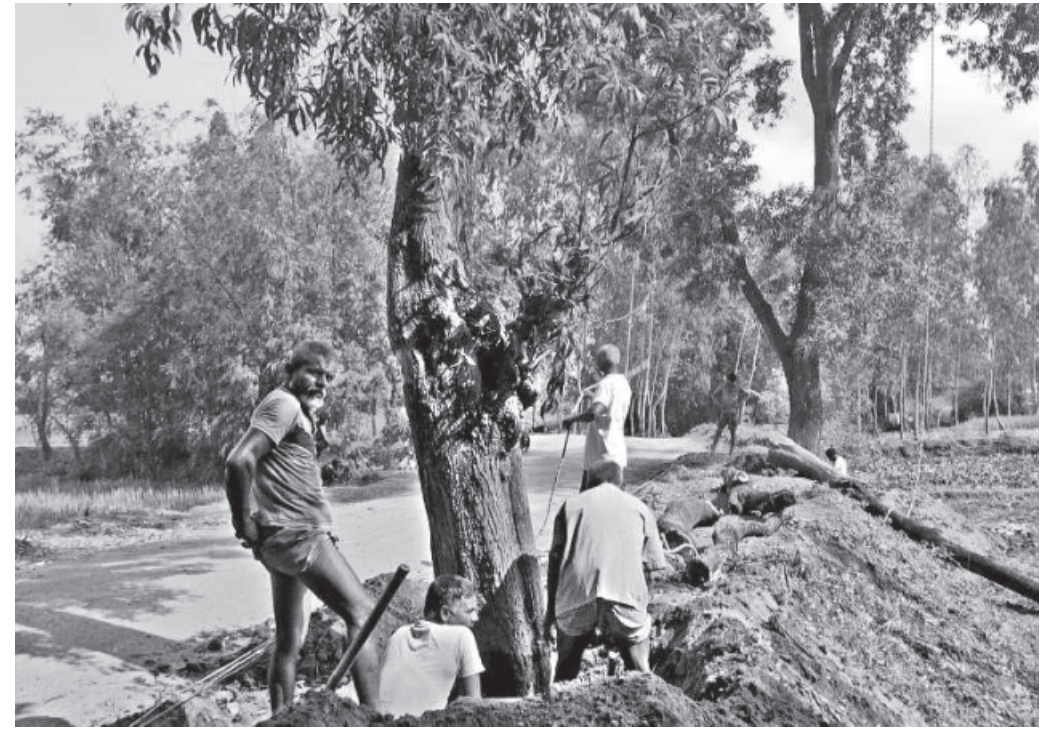

Locals alleged that Forman Ali, who got the auction order to fell the 1200 trees, is getting many unauthorised trees felled while the authorities are not taking any action.

"Forman felled roadside green trees, including the ones that are not marked as auctioned by zila parishad and forest department. Our protest fell into deaf ears while the authorities seem reluctant to take any action," said Fazle Rahman, 55, of Panbari village.

"We don't understand why many trees, which were at safe distances from the road, have been felled," said Nazrul Islam, 62, at Dahagram village.

"As the bidder's men continued to fell roadside green trees outside auction, I informed the authorities concerned of the matter but no step has been taken yet," said Kamal Hossain, chairman of Dahagram Union Parishad.
