

Apple iPhone 12 and Samsung S11 leak updates

As the iPhone 11 family settles into the festive season, Apple's engineers will be hard at work on the follow up device. Due to launch in September 2020, the iPhone 12 is expected to advance Cupertino's smartphone far more than the evolutionary jump the iPhone 11 made over the iPhone XS and XR.

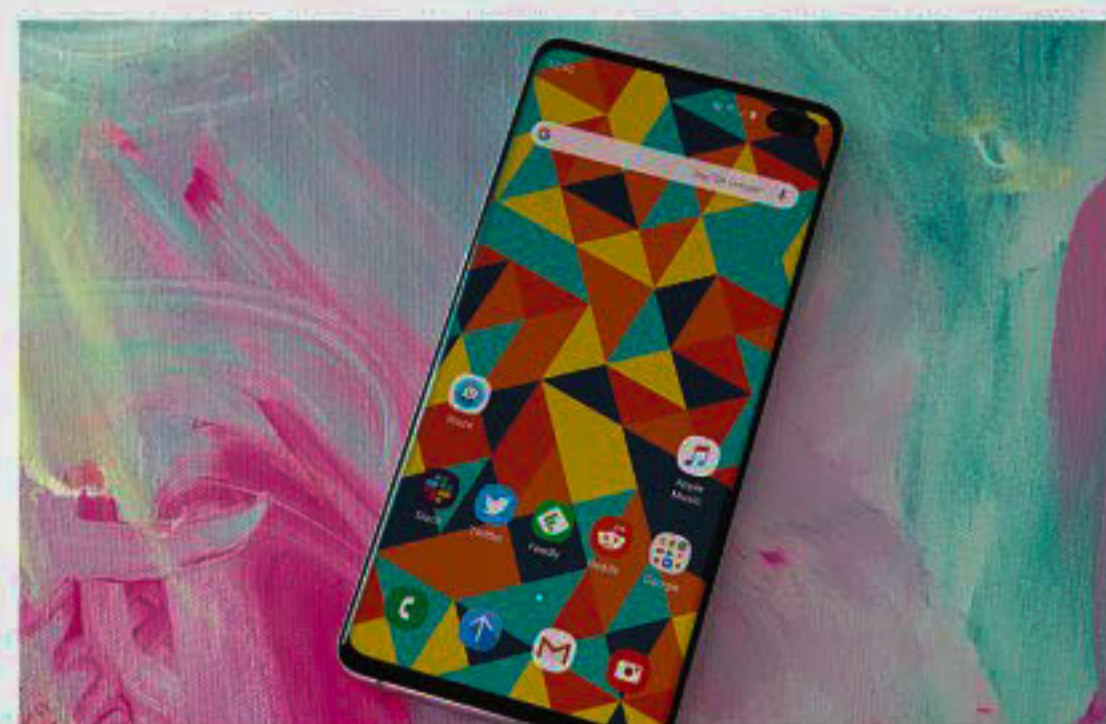

It looks like the battery is going to receive a lot of attention to ensure the iPhone 12 can call on a lot more power than any comparable iPhone.

Details on a new 'battery protection model' for the iPhone 12 have been noted by The Elec in South Korea. This would be a smaller model than the one supplied to the iPhone 11 range, which would free up internal volume.

The expectation is that this would be used for a larger power cell.

The iPhone 11 is shipped with a 3110 mAh battery. In comparison the Galaxy S10 ships with a 3400 mAh battery and the OnePlus 7T ships with a 3800 mAh battery. The iPhone 11 is packing less power than the competition.

While iOS 13 is frugal on power, the 2020 iPhones are all going to have a significant drain on the battery, because all of the iPhone 12 handsets are going to come with 5G capabilities. That on its own is going to increase the demand on the batter

EDITOR'S NOTE

I have a confession. Like many other woke people, I love to think of the idea of being fit (or that of being woke). I am not fit though. I try. I watch a lot of videos and read self-help articles. I even took up running over the year or two. But during winter, I cough and wheeze because the dust is ridiculous. I feel light headed and double over from chest pains. The street dogs lick my hands telling me it will all be okay. I cannot die right now. I have next week's issue of Toggle to work out.

So I head back home for a lovely cup of caramel coffee waiting for the fitness to kick in next year. In the meantime, we have a story on air pollution solution.

IBA Legacies 2019 is live

Representatives of the English debating circuit in Bangladesh have secured multiple championships and personal accolades on the global stage over the years. With their indelible contributions in mind, Institute of Business Administration, University of Dhaka (IBA-DU) is hosting Guardian Life Insurance Limited presents IBA Legacies 2019, powered by SELISE, in association with Mutual Trust Bank Limited. It is a first-of-its kind tournament, from 20-21 December of 2019. The tournament will feature debaters from IBA DU, BRAC, NSU, IUB, IUT, CU and DU.

The tournament is intervarsity in nature, but participants aren't required to be currently enrolled. Iconic debating figures, most of whom have long since graduated from their respective universities, will return to the podium and represent their past institutions in the tournament. The tournament will connect them with the new generation of debaters, many of whom will get to watch them perform for the first time.

Honda Xblade launched in Bangladesh

Bangladesh Honda Limited, the local subsidiary of Honda Motor Corp., launched the locally assembled 160cc Honda Xblade at a two-day event in the capital's International Convention City, Bashundhara, on 13th and 14th December 2019.

The 14 HP and 10.3 lb-ft torque HET motor has been tested by Honda to give a fuel efficiency figure of 59 km/l. Mono-shock suspension, 130 mm rear tyres, long-wheelbase design and 276mm front disc brake makes the Xblade safe and comfortable, aside from being a stylish bike with decent power. Colours include Pearl Spartan Red, Pearl Igneous Black and Matte Marshal Green Metallic.

The Xblade is available through Bangladesh Honda Limited for a price of BDT 1,72,900.

New cars this week

Audi's brand new RS5 Sportback tries to hone in on the Benz GT63 with the much loved RS5 badge, now with five doors instead of two. Looks handsome, expected to go like stink.

Mercedes-Benz has found more than enough buyers for the GLA compact SUV in the past few years to warrant a major design update—this time rounder and with more elements of the Benz design language. Soon to arrive on our shores.
