CATS

The Felidae family, commonly known as cats, consists of 38 species of carnivorous mammals. Cats are native to all parts of the world except for Australia and Antarctica. In the family are our familiar domestic cat, as well as Tigers, Lions, Leopards, Cheetahs, Jaguars, Pumas, Lynxes and Mountain Lions. Their acute senses, fast reflexes, explosive muscular strength and a supple skeleton make them excellent hunters. They stalk, chase and pounce on their prey, using their sharp canine teeth to kill.

The cat family evolved from a weasel-like animal about 20 million years ago. The domestic cat goes back to early Egyptian civilization when, as far back as 4000 years ago, people took a liking to it because of its ability to hunt small rodents and snakes, thus keeping food supplies safe.

Dr. Monirul Khan's Photographic Guide to the Wildlife of Bangladesh lists seven wild cat species in Bangladesh. They are Jungle Cat, Clouded Leopard, Leopard, Bengal Tiger, Marbled Cat, Leopard Cat and Fishing Cat. Unfortunately none of these cats is easy to see in the wild. They are few in number and are extremely wary of humans. All I have managed to see are a Jungle Cat at Rema-Kalenga Wildlife Sanctuary (at night with a flashlight), and an unfortunate Fishing Cat that had been killed and left by the side of the road (yes, people in our villages still kill wild animals ruthlessly.)

I had better luck overseas. My first cat in the wild was a Leopard I saw in Uganda's Queen Elizabeth Park. It crossed the road in front of our car and paused just behind some bushes, looking at us through the leaves for a few seconds before disappearing into the forest. In Kenya's Masai Mara I saw Lions, Cheetahs and a Leopard. A bonus of the Kenya trip was a Serval, a smaller cat with distinctively tall legs.

But my best cat sighting was watching the Jaguar in the Pantanal, Brazil's massive wetland. This beautiful creature had been almost hunted to extinction by ranchers until they realized the potential it held for attracting tourists. Today, numerous tourists visit Brazil to see Jaguars. While charting the massive Paraguay river by boat, I was able to see several Jaguars at a leisurely pace, including one that crossed the river with two infants in tow.

The Bengal Tiger and the African Lion are perhaps the two most fabled cats of the world. The man-eating habits of Bengal Tigers of yesterday have given rise to many thrilling stories close to our home. While it was widespread in our country at one time, today its habitation has shrunk to the mangrove forest of Sundarban where the inhospitable terrain allows it to escape the hand of man. Our other cats are scattered among the patches of forests that remain in our country.

I once met a photographer on Instagram whose goal is to photograph all members of the cat family. It is an ambitious project, considering the difficulty of reaching cats such as the Snow Leopard in the Himalayas and Geoffroy's Cat in remote Argentina. But still, what an epic adventure it must be!

Cold wave, fog disrupt communication in Ctg

BSS, Chattogram

Dense fog and cold wave largely paralysed life in Chattogram and its adjacent areas, causing disruption of air, water and road communications and bringing acute suffering to thousands of people.

Chattogram has witnessed severe cold with dense fog as a cold wave is sweeping over different parts of the region, said Mahamudul Islam, a meteorologist at the district Met Office. He said temperatures are likely to rise from Monday.

Many children and elderly people have been suffering badly from various cold-related diseases, Dr Kutub Uddin of Chattogram Medical College Hospital, told the news agency.

Homeless people were seen lighting fires to keep themselves warm, as the sun remained invisible yesterday morning due to dense fog.

Air traffic control room sources of Chattogram Shah Amanat International Airport said dense fog disrupted flights' operations, as schedules of domestic and international flights were moved for one to three hours due to fog.

Omar Faruk, secretary of Chattogram Port Authority, said plying of all kinds of ships in the port channel remained suspended for two or three hours early yesterday.

Port authorities were compelled to impose a ban on movements of all vessels till 9am to and from Chattogram, owing to poor visibility, said radio control room of Chattogram port sources.

JNU STUDENTS' UNION

Draft constitution to be published online soon: VC

JNU CORRESPONDENT

The draft constitution of Jagannath University Central Student's Union (JnUCSU) is set to be published -- for taking everyone's opinion -- on the university's website soon, authorities said.

"The draft constitution of JnUCSU will be published on the university's website soon, seeking opinions from stakeholders," JnU Vice Chancellor Mijanur Rahman told The Daily Star. The draft will undergo necessary modifications based on stakeholders' feedback, he added.

The decision was made at the 81st syndicate meeting of the university held at the VC office on Thursday.

The draft constitution will be available on the website for 90 days. Within this time, anyone can provide their opinion on it.

"Suggested modifications will be discussed during the next syndicate meeting," the VC said.

On July 1 this year, the university authority formed a committee led by law department Prof Sarker Ali Akkas to provide necessary recommendations for amending the JnU Act, 2005, which had no section or sub-section regarding student union polls.

The committee submitted their report to the JnU VC on September 22.

JnU is yet to hold a JnUCSU election since the former Jagannath College turned into a university in 2005. Legal limitations prevented the elections from taking place, officials said.
